This and the preceding are perhaps the best commentaries, for all purposes, that are extant, on the portions of the Scriptures of which they treat. That on John is more diffuse, and intended for the younger student. The commentary on Romans, even by German rationalist divines, is considered as the best known. It is clear, original in its investigations, profound, not shunning real difficulties, and displaying learning where it is not needed, but boldly venturing on the theological discussion and interpretation of contested texts. It is likewise spiritual in its tendency and influence—a common merit in the writings of its pious author.

* * * Numerous translations of Detached Books of Scripture have, at various times, been published by Archbishop Newcome, Bishop Lowth, the Rev. Dr. Blayney, Dr. J. M. Good, and other eminent critics and philologists, for accounts of which, the reader is referred to the larger Introduction of Horne.

§ 5.—Concordances, Dictionaries, and Common-place Books of the Bible.

The Hebrew Concordance, adapted to the English Bible; disposed after the method of Buxtorf. By John TAYLOR, D. D. [of Norwich.] London, 1754. 2 vols. folio.

§ 6.—Connections of Sacred and Profane History; Treatises on Biblical Antiquities, and on other Historical Circumstances of the Bible.

The Sacred and Profane History of the World, connected, from the Creation of the World to the Dissolution of the Assyrian Empire. By S. SHUCKFORD, M. A., 4 vols. 8vo. London, 1743; best edition. This well-known and valuable work has been several times reprinted. Price, ll. 7s. to ll. 10s.

The Old and New Testaments connected, in the History of the Jews and neighboring Nations, from the Declension of the Kingdoms of Israel and Judah to the Time of Christ. By Humphrey PRIDEAUX, D. D. 4 vols. 8vo. London, 1749. 10th edit. reprinted in 4 vols. 8vo. London, 1817. Price, ll. 7s. to ll. 10s.

The Connection of Sacred and Profane History, from the Death of Joshua until the Decline of the Kingdoms of Israel and Judah. Intended to complete the works of Shuckford and Prideaux. By the Rev. M. RUSSELL, LL. D. London, 1827, in 2 vols. 8vo.

A History of the Holy Bible, from the beginning of the World to the Establishment of Christianity; with Answers to Infidel Objections, Dissertations on the most remarkable Passages and most important Doctrines, and a Connection of the Profane with the Sacred Writings. By the Rev. Thomas STACKHOUSE, A. M. The whole corrected and improved by the Right Rev. George GLEIG, LL. D., one of the Bishops of the Scotch Episcopal Church. London, 1817. 3 vols. 4to.

The best edition of a well-known and valuable work: it was published at 4l. 14s. 6d., but may frequently be met with for about 3l. 3s.

Scripture Chronology; or, an Account of Time, from the Creation of the World to the Destruction of Jerusalem. By Arthur BEDFORD. London, 1730. Folio. Price, ll. 1s.

A New Analysis of Chronology, in which an attempt is made to explain the History and Antiquities of the primitive Nations of the World, and the Prophecies relating to them, on principles tending to remove the imperfection and discordance of preceding systems. By the Rev. William HALLES, D. D. 3 vols. 4to. in four parts. London, 1809-1812. Price, 8l. 8s. Also, 4 vols. 8vo. Lond. 1830.

The title of this work very inadequately describes its multifarious contents. Besides treating on sacred chronology, it contains a treasure of most valuable elucidations of the Holy Scriptures. It is now becoming scarce.

Dissertations on the Prophecies which have been remarkably fulfilled, and at this time are fulfilling, in the World. By Thomas NEWTON, D. D., Bishop of Bristol. London, 1759 or 1766, 3 vols. 8vo.; price, ll. 4s.; or 1817, 2 vols. 8vo., 18s.

History the Interpreter of Prophecy. By the Rev. Henry KETT, B. D. London, 1817. 2 vols. 8vo. Price, 11s.

A Key to the Prophecies; or, a Concise View of the Predictions contained in the Old and New Testaments. By the Rev. David SIMPSON, M. A. London, 1816. 8vo. Price, 9s.

The Evidence of the Truth of the Christian Religion, derived from the literal Fulfilment of Prophecy; particularly as illustrated by the History of the Jews, and by the Discoveries of recent Travellers. By the Rev. Alexander KEITH. Third edition, enlarged. Edinburgh, 1823. 12mo. Price, 6s.

The Natural History of the Bible; or, a Description of all the Quadrupeds, Birds, Fishes, Reptiles, and Insects, Trees, Plants, Flowers, Gems, and Precious Stones, mentioned in the Sacred Scriptures. Collected from the best Authorities, and alphabetically arranged. By T. M. HARRIS, D. D. Boston, 1820. 8vo. Reprinted at London, 1824. 8vo. Price, 9s. An Abridgment in 12mo. with plates. London, 1825. Price, 8s.

Scripture Natural History; or, a Descriptive Account of the Zoology, Botany, and Geology of the Bible, illustrated by Engravings. By William CARPENTER. London, 1828. 8vo. Price, 11s.

Moses and Aaron; or, the Civil and Ecclesiastical Rites used by the ancient Hebrews. By Thomas GODWIN. London, 1641. 4to. Price, 4s.

Jewish Antiquities; or, a Course of Lectures on the first three Books of Godwin's Moses and Aaron. By David JENNINGS, D. D. 2 vols. 8vo. London, 1766, price 18s.; or, 1823, 2 vols. 8vo. Price, 14s.

The Antiquities of the Jews, carefully compiled from authentic sources, and their customs illustrated by modern Travels. By W. BROWN, D. D. London, 1820. 2 vols. 8vo. Price, 11. 4s.

Illustrations of the Holy Scripture; in three Parts. By the Rev. George PAXTON. Edinburgh, 1825. Second edition, 3 vols. 8vo. Price, 11. 16s.

Observations on divers Passages of Scripture, placing many of them in a light altogether new, by means of circumstances mentioned in Books of Voyages and Travels in the East. By the Rev. Thomas HARMER. London, 1816. 4 vols. 8vo., best edition. Price, 27. 8s.

Oriental Customs; or, an Illustration of the Sacred Scriptures, by an Explanatory Application of the Customs and Manners of the Eastern Nations. By the Rev. S. BURDER, A. M. Sixth edition, 1822. 2 vols. 8vo. Price, 11. 4s.

This is a useful abridgment of Harmer's Observations, with many valuable additions from voyagers and travellers, arranged in the order of the books, chapters, and verses of the Bible.

Oriental Literature applied to the Illustration of the Sacred Scriptures; especially with reference to Antiquities, Traditions, and Manners; collected from the most celebrated writers and travellers, both ancient and modern; designed as a Sequel to Oriental Customs. By the Rev. Samuel BURDER, A. M. London, 1822. 2 vols. 8vo. Price, 11. 4s.

History of the Hebrew Commonwealth; translated from the German of JAHN, by C. E. Stewe; with an Appendix from Basnage, by Rogers. 8vo. Andover, 1828.

JAHN's Biblical Archaeology; translated by Upham. 8vo. Andover, 1823.

Both these are leading works in their respective departments, and the latter is in extensive use as a text-book.

MICHAËLIS's Commentaries on the Laws of Moses; translated by Alex. Smith, D. D. 4 vols. 8vo.

A profoundly learned and highly valuable work, replete with the most thorough investigations concerning the laws of Moses, upon which great light is thrown by the celebrated author, from the manners, customs, and particularly the civil regulations, of ancient nations, especially the Egyptians.

Illustrations of the Sacred Scriptures, collected from the Customs, Manners, Rites, Superstitions, Traditions, &c. of the Hindoos, during a Residence in the East of nearly fourteen years. By the Rev. Joseph ROBERTS.

See 'Biography of Bib. Writers,' Art. Roberts.

Illustrations of the Holy Scriptures, derived principally from the Manners, Customs, Rites, Traditions, Forms of Speech, Antiquities, &c. of the Eastern Nations. 1 vol. royal 8vo. Brattleboro', 1836. Price, $5.

This volume embraces most that is valuable in the works of Harmer, Burder, Paxton, Roberts, and the most celebrated Oriental travellers, together with the subject of the fulfilment of prophecy, as presented by Keith. The whole is exhibited in the order of the books, chapters, and verses of the Bible.

Sacred Geography; being a Geographical and Historical Account of Places mentioned in the Holy Scriptures. By Edward WELLS, D. D. Oxford, 1819. 2 vols. 8vo.; besides various other editions. Price, 15s.

The preceding Catalogue has been framed on a principle of selection, which should comprise one or more works on the most important topics of Sacred Literature, both Critical and Practical, as well as Geographical and Historical, and of various prices; whence students may (with the advice of experienced tutors) choose such as are best adapted to their immediate wants.

TABLE IV.

Synchrony of the most Remarkable Events which have occurred in the World from the Creation to the Destruction of Jerusalem.

EPOCH I.

Julian Period.	A. M.	B. C.	FROM THE CREATION TO THE DELUGE; 1656 YEARS.
710	1	4004	The work of creation begun, according to Usher's computation of the Hebrew text, on Sunday, the 23d of Oct. See Ge. ch. 1. First day: the heavens and the earth created; origin of light; distinction between day and night. [These days, or periods, however, are of uncertain but definite length, perhaps thousands of years.] Second day: the firmament created, and the superior and inferior waters divided. Third day: the earth drained; seas, lakes, rivers, &c., formed; trees, plants, and vegetables produced. Fourth day: the sun, moon, stars, and planetary system [visible]. Fifth day: fowls and fishes produced. Sixth day: quadrupeds, reptiles, insects, and lastly man, created. The garden of Eden planted, and Adam and his wife placed therein. Seventh day: the 1st Sabbath, or day of rest, on Saturday, October 29. *The first woman sinn'd; leads her husband into the transgression; and both are expelled the garden of Eden. The woman receives the name of Eve, as being the mother of all mankind. Expiatory sacrifices first instituted. *Cain and Abel born about this time. *Abel murdered by Cain. Seth born, the 2d of the patriarchs before the flood; Adam being the 1st. Enos, son of Seth, born, the third patriarch, in whose days it is said (Ge. 4:26), 'men began to call upon the name of the Lord,' or, as some tr., 'men began to call themselves by the name of the Lord': hence originated the distinction between the descendants of Seth, who are called the sons of God, and those of Cain, who are denominated sons of men. It is also supposed that idolatry was introduced by the latter about this time; [and Cain worshipped.] Cañan, the 4th patriarch, born, in the 90th year of Enos. Mahalalel, the 5th patriarch, born, in the 70th year of Cañan. Jared, the 6th patriarch, born, in the 65th year of Mahalalel. Enoch, the 7th patriarch, born, in the 102d year of Jared. [*Beyond this is the Fabulous Period of Chinese History; viz. Pwankwo, the first that appeared 'after the heavens were separated'; then, 12 brothers, who reigned 45,000 years; 11, who reigned 18,000; 9, who reigned 18,000. At 3369, Choo-foo-tsze commences his Chinese history with the first king of the obscure period of the 'Three Sovereigns' dynasty, which lasted till 2622. In 2789, caps and garments are said to have been made. In 3254 lived Fub-he, who taught agriculture, fishing, the care of cattle, nurturing, music, &c. And beyond this date is placed the invention of fire. Several things affirmed of this period, says Choo-foo-tsze, 'were all pushed up by people who lived in subsequent ages.'] Methuselah, the 8th patriarch, born, in the 65th year of Enoch. Lamech, the 9th patriarch, born, in the 187th year of Methuselah. Death of Adam, at the age of 930 years. Enoch, for his piety, translated to heaven, in his 365th year. Seth dies at the age of 912 years. Noah, the 10th patriarch before the flood, born, in the 182d year of Lamech. Enos dies, aged 905 years. Cañan dies, aged 910 years. Mahalalel dies, aged 993 years. Jared dies, aged 462 years. [*Dynasty of the 'Five Emperors,' commenced in China, and continued till 2169, — a period of much obscurity. The last two emperors lived to be 118 and 110 years old. The Chinese deluge is dated 2230. Beyond 2330, Choo-foo-tsze thinks it impossible to fix the year of the cycle (said to have been formed in this year), or to give 'entire credit to the traditions of these remote ages.' The culture of the mulberry, silk, and the silk-worm, and weaving, by Yuen-fé, wife of Hwang-te, is dated in the early part of this dynasty. Some place here a Prince Te-che, who 'proceeded to unlimited dissipation.'] God reveals to Noah his purpose of destroying the inhabitants of the earth by a general deluge; commissions him to preach repentance, and commands him to prepare an ark, or vessel, for the preservation of himself and family from the impending judgment. Ge. 6:5, &c. Japheth, eldest son of Noah, born. Shem, second son of Noah, born. He is considered as the first of the patriarchs after the flood. Ham, the youngest son of Noah, born about this time. Lamech, father of Noah, dies, aged 777. Methuselah dies, aged 969 years, being the oldest of all men. The preaching of Noah having produced no general reformation, the Almighty orders him to enter the ark with his own family only, and the animals who were instinctively directed to it. This takes place on the 17th day of the 2d month (which, according to Alp. Usher's calculation, was Sunday, Nov. 30), and on that day se'might the rain begins and continues 40 days, as described Ge. 7:11, &c. The whole period of the deluge was 150 days.

2367	1657	2347	The deluge. — On Wednesday, May 6, the ark rests on the mountains of Ararat; but Noah does not quit it till Friday, Decemver 13.
2368	1658	2346	Arphaxad, the first patriarch after the flood, born.
2373	1663	2341	Malediction of Cañan, youngest son of Ham.
2403	1693	2311	Salah, the second postdiluvian patriarch, born.
2433	1723	2281	Eber horn, whose name signifies passage ; whence it is conjectured that about this time the first migration from the neighborhood of Ararat took place. It probably consisted of the younger branches of the family of Ham, who, travelling towards the west and south, settled in Phenicia and Egypt.
2467	1757	2247	Peleg born, in whose days the earth was divided, as his name implies.
2469	1759	2245	*The tower of Babel built by Noah's posterity, as a rallying point, in the plain of Shinar; whereupon God miraculously confounds their language, and causes them to disperse. — Usher.
2480	1770	2231	*Assur begins the kingdom of Assyria, according to the general notion of chronologers.
2481	1771	2233	The celestial observations of the Chaldeans are begun at Babylon, according to a register sent by Callisthenes to Aristotle, B. C. 331, containing the astral phenomena of 1903 years.
2497	1787	2217	*Nimrod, surnamed Belus, begins the kingdom of Babel, or Babylon, about this time, and expels Assur from the south of the land of Shinar, who returns to the east bank of the Tigris, and builds Nineveh and other cities. About the same time, according to Mr. Bryant, the Cuthites, or progeny of Cush, the father of Nimrod, project the tower of Babel.
2513	1803	2201	Ren born, the fourth of the postdiluvian patriarchs.
2516	1806	2198	[Wilkinson here places Menes (of Manetho, &c.), Menai of the monuments; allowing 11 years for each king spoken of. Eratosthenes gives 53 years for the 19 kings before Appius. Comp. the note, Guide, p. 58. The successors of Menai are uncertain. Before, are 'demigods,' perhaps patriarchal priests; H. counts his lists of kings back from Shushak .] *The first dynasty of Chinese emperors, called Hya , or Hra , or Tang , begins, and lasts 441 years, under 17 emperors. [Morrison commences it with Tu yu, in 2169, and closes it with Keewang, in 1756; 413 years. Ta-yu, the repairer of the effects of the deluge, died in 2142, aged 100. He was 9 cubits 2 tenths high. He divided the land into 9 regions, referred to in the histories Woo-king and She-shoo. Morrison quotes the following from a Chinese work: — 'Of the Shang-shoo, which treats of this period, there is a copy called Koo wan; since the dynasty Sung (A. D. 1100), all the literati have much suspected that it was spurious.' The other copy is not doubtful, says M., adding, 'that Confucius had 3000 odes from which he compiled the She-king, is disputed. The Yih-king also is mutilated; some quotations from it are not now found in it.' Wine was made by E-teli, and Te-Yu drank of it, and delighted in it, but, apprehensive of its consequences in succeeding ages, procured its prohibition.]
2526	1816	2188	*The kingdom of Egypt begins, under Mizor, or Metzor, the son of Ham, chief of the tribe called Mizraim .
2529	1819	2185	Serug, the fifth postdiluvian patriarch, born.
2558	1848	2156	*Babel overthrown, according to Mr. Bryant, and the lip of the builders confounded. The Chaldean priests collect their sacred utensils, and, returning north-westward, build a city called Shinar (the Singara of Ptolemy), in Mesopotamia.

Nahor, the sixth of the patriarchs, born. — The Assyrians begin to return to the south of Shinar, or Babylonia. — *Soreg settles in Ur of the Chaldees.
 [The Menou tsze existed at this time, and have continued as a distinct people, chiefly in the mountains, to the present day. Were they not, asks Morrison, the aborigines, and the Chinese a colony?]
 Birth of Terah, the seventh patriarch from Shem.
 [Sophis, or Saophis, king in Egypt. He built the great pyramid. These 3 kings, Sophis, Sen Saophis, and Mecheres, should be the Cheops, Cepheus (his brother) and Mycerinus of Herodotus, whom he has strangely misplaced, making them posterior to Sesostrius and Morris. Diolorus calls Cheops, Cheramus, or Chembes! [Name of SS.?] W.]
 Asshor, having subjugated the Cuthites, assumes the regal title of Belus, and reigns 55 years, which begins the kingdom of Assyria.
 Noah is by some supposed about this time to have founded the Chinese monarchy. — He is known to the natives under the name of Ko-hi.
 Agiadas settles in the Peloponnesus, and begins a kingdom, at first called Egialecia, afterwards Aria, and finally Sicyon, being the oldest of the Greek states.
 [Sen Saophis (i. e. Saophis's brother) reigns in Egypt. Era of Chinese Yao. 2057. W.]
 Niurus, son and successor of Asshor, begins to reign at Nineveh.
 Niurus, after a long siege, takes the city of Shinar from the Chasdim, or Chaldeans, and appoints a viceroy there. Soon afterwards, he marries Semiramis, of Cuthite extraction, by which means the Sabian idolatry is introduced among the posterity of Shem.
 Action and Drcis, sons of Manuas, or Thorganna (the Hypsistos of Sanchoniatho, and the Ashkenaz of Moses), set out on their celebrated expedition from Phrygia into Cappadocia, Armenia, and the parts of Scythia on the north and east of the Caspian Sea; on their return, they assume the title of Titans, or 'sons of the earth,' or 'of the sun.'
 Nahor and Haran, sons of Terah, born.
 Mescheris, or Mecheres, reigns in Egypt; and Misthis (?) in 2022. W.
 The 16th dynasty (according to Eusebius) of five Theban kings, begins in Egypt, and continues 190 years. Their names are unknown.
 Pannous Archonides (?) reigns in Egypt. W.
 Peleg dies, aged 239.
 Nahor dies, aged 148. — Semiramis succeeds her husband Niurus in Assyria, and soon afterwards lays the foundation of Babylon. The Cuthites revolt, and are defeated and dispersed.
 A numerous body of Cuthites, having been expelled the dominions of Semiramis, enter Egypt, under the title of Hyc-sos, or King-Shepherds, and subjugate the lower country during 230 years. This is the 17th dynasty of Menetho.
 [Apapus, or Aphoph, ascends the Egyptian throne; his name in Coptic signifies giant, maximus.]
 Noah dies, aged 950 years; 350 years after the flood.
 Birth of Abram, the eighth of the patriarchs.
 *Uranos, the same as Celsus, son of Amon, begins to reign in Asia Minor, and soon afterwards passes into Europe, and begins the empire of the Celtes, or descendants of Gomer, the eldest son of Japheth.
 Birth of Sarai, wife of Abram.
 Reu dies, aged 239.
 *The city of Damascus is said to have been built about this time, [and on the place where Abel was killed, whence its name.]
 Ninyas, or Zamuis, succeeds his mother Semiramis at Babylon and Nineveh, and reigns 38 years. To secure his western provinces, he appoints a viceroy at Shinar.
 Serog dies, at the age of 239.
 The Cuthites in Asia, taking advantage of the inattention of Ninyas, form a general insurrection; which gives rise to a coalition of princes of the line of Shem, with Chedorlaomer, king of Elam (Persia), conquers the kings of Sodom, Gomorrah, Adma, Zeboim, and Bela, or Zoar, and keeps them in subjection 12 years. Tidal, king of nations (or of Syria), reigns about this time.
 *Uranus deposed, and the Celtic empire usurped by his youngest son, Hes, or Saturn, the first prince that ever wore a crown. Cres reigns in Crete about the same time.
 Abram removes from Ur of the Chaldees to Haran, in Mesopotamia, taking with him his nephew Lot, his wife Sarai, and his father Terah. At this time, the idolatrous worship introduced by Semiramis had obtained a great ascendant in Assyria.
 *Zoroaster the Bactrian, chief of the Guebros, or fire-worshippers, and Hermes, the Egyptian, are reputed to have lived about this time.
 Terah, the father of Abram, dies, aged 205. Abram, in obedience to the divine command, removes into Canaan, being 75 years of age. The 430 years of sojourning, spoken of Ex. 12:40, are generally reckoned from this epoch.

EPOCH III. — FROM THE VOCATION OF ABRAHAM TO THE EXODUS OF ISRAEL; 430 YEARS.

2794	2084	1920	Abram goes into Egypt, on account of a famine in Canaan; and causes Sarai to pass for his sister.
2796	2086	1918	Abram having returned with his family to Canaan, Lot separates himself from him, and goes to Sodom; while Abram resides in the valley of Mamre, near Hebron.
2800	2090	1914	Revolt of the kings of Sodom, &c., from Chedorlaomer, which occasions a war the next year, when the king of Sodom is defeated, and Lot is taken away among the captives.
2801	2091	1913	Abram defeats the troops of Chedorlaomer, rescues Lot and the other captives, and is blessed by Melchisedec, priest and king of Salem; on this occasion Abram is supposed to have begun the practice of giving tithes.
2803	2093	1911	God promises a numerous posterity to Abram.
2804	2094	1910	Ishmael born to Abram, of his concubine, Hagar. About the same time, Bela, the first king of the Horites, begins to reign.
2806	2096	1908	Arphaxad dies, 303 years after the birth of Shish.
2810	2100	1901	*Jupiter, son of Saturn, king of the Celtes, born, according to Perron's calculation. [Wilkinson makes kings in Egypt, Achæsus Ocaras (?) 1901; Nitocris (?) 1930; Myrtæus (?) 1890; Thysiosinus (?) 1880; Thyallus (?) 1866; Semphocrates (?) 1813; also Argos founded, 1866; Ogyges' deluge in Attica, 1848.]
2817	2107	1897	God makes a covenant with Abram — enjoins the rite of circumcision — changes his name to Abraham , and his wife's to Sarah — and gives them the promise of a legitimate son. The cities of Sodom, Gomorrah, &c., destroyed; but Lot is delivered, and dwells in a cave of the mountains, with his two daughters.
2818	2108	1896	Isaac, the child of promise, born to Abraham of Sarai; Abraham being 100 years old. — About the same time, the daughters of Lot, by an incestuous commerce with their father, give birth to Moab and Ben-ammi, heads of the Moabites and Ammonites.
2820	2110	1894	Ishmael and his mother Hagar dismissed from Abraham's house.
2823	2118	1895	Treaty between Abraham and Abimelech, king of Gerar, relative to the well of Beer-sheba.
2836	2126	1878	Salah dies, 103 years after the birth of Eber.
2843	2133	1871	Isaac being 25 years of age, his father is commanded to offer him up in sacrifice to God; but the Almighty substitutes a ram in his stead, on finding the faith of Abraham unshaken.
2851	2141	1863	*Second revolt of the Titans, by whom Satura is deposed; but by the timely arrival of Jupiter with forces from Crete, the rebellion is checked, and Satura restored.
2855	2145	1859	Sarah dies, aged 127 years.
2858	2148	1856	Isaac marries Rebekah.
2864	2151	1850	*Abraham marries Keturah about this time.
2868	2158	1846	Shem, son of Noah, dies at the age of 600 years.
2872	2162	1812	*Jupiter, at the age of 62, deposes his father, and reigns in Thessaly 60 years. A third revolt, better known by the title of the Giants' war , quickly ensues; Jupiter and his friends are obliged to seek refuge in Egypt, and other distant countries, till the valor of Hercules enables them to return, and the Titans are totally overthrown.
2878	2168	1836	Esau and Jacob born; their father being 60 years of age.
2884	2174	1830	[Men-ma-Rep, Memnus, or Meomoph, king in Egypt. 15th dynasty of 1 king. W.]
2891	2181	1823	The kingdom of Argos begun by Inachus, son of Oceanus, and cousin to Jupiter, whose lieutenant he appears to have been. — Lenglet Dufresnoy.
2892	2182	1822	*Meinon, the Egyptian, is by some supposed to have invented letters. According to the supposition of our tables, he is the same with Amenophis II., who began to reign B. C. 1718, and is the Pharaoh who promoted Joseph.
2893	2183	1821	Abraham dies, aged 175 years.
2897	2187	1817	Eber dies, 430 years after the birth of Peleg.
2918	2203	1795	*Ogyges reigns over Boeotia, Attica, &c., 1020 years before the first Olympiad.

TABLES.

Julian Period.	A. M.	B. C.	EPOCH III. (CONTINUED.)
2918	2208	1796	*Esau marries two Canaanitish women about this time.
2932	2222	1782	*Jupiter dies, aged 122, and the empire of the Celtes is dissolved. Petron.
2934	2224	1780	Amenophis I., King of Thebes and Memphis, in Egypt, having united most of the minor states of that country, and broken the power of the Hyc-sos, assumes the title of Pharaoh, or universal monarch.
2935	2225	1779	Jacob by subtlety obtains his father's blessing, which had been promised to Esau — goes to Haran, and engages to serve his uncle Laban seven years for Rachel.
2941	2231	1773	Ishmael dies, aged 137 years.
2942	2232	1772	Jacob marries Leah and Rachel.
2950	2240	1764	*Deluge of Ogyges, in Bœotia and Attica, in consequence of which the latter lies waste for upwards of 200 years, till the arrival of Cecrops.
2957	2217	1757	The second dynasty of Chinese emperors, called Chang, or Shang, and afterwards Ying, or Yin, begins, and continues 656 years, under 30 emperors. [Morrison commences it in 1756, and closes it in 1112 (644 years), and states that this part of Chinese history is under great obligations to historians of subsequent times. At this early period, the people on the N. of China are spoken of with contempt and abuse. The Chinese, instead of saying they subdued the N., say they conquered the land of demons or devils.]
2971	2261	1743	The Hyc-sos, or Shepherd-Kings, expelled Egypt by Amosis, or Tuthmosis.
		1740	[Osiriscon I., king of Egypt 43 years. Joseph arrives in his reign. The names and era of the 5 monarchs before Osiriscon are uncertain. This 16th dynasty, from Lower Egypt.]
2975	2265	1739	Jacob and his family, unknown to Laban, set out on their return to Canaan; Laban pursues them; but being warned of God, makes a friendly treaty with Jacob, on overtaking him, and returns. Jacob, pursuing his journey, wrestles with an angel, who changes his name to Israel — meets Esau, and is reconciled to him — and finally settles among the Shechemites in Canaan. Job is supposed to have lived about this time.
2983	2273	1731	Rape of Dinah, Jacob's daughter, which causes the destruction of Shechem and his people by Simeon and Levi.
2985	2275	1729	[Commencement of 7 years of 'great drought' and famine in China. At the close, the king 'prayed in the mulberry-groves and desert places,' and while he was praying, a heavy rain fell over a space of several hundred miles.]
2986	2276	1728	Joseph sold, by his brethren, into Egypt, at the age of 17 years.
2995	2285	1719	Joseph cast into prison by Putiphar, on a false accusation of his mistress.
2998	2288	1716	Isaac dies at the age of 180.
2999	2289	1715	Joseph interprets the king's two prophetic dreams, and is promoted to the first place in Pharaoh's house and kingdom. — The seven years of plenty begin the following year.
3006	2296	1703	The seven years of famine begin.
3007	2297	1707	Joseph's brethren go into Egypt, to purchase corn, the first time; on their return, the next year, he discovers himself to them, and invites his father to settle in Egypt, which he complies with.
3012	2302	1702	The Egyptians, having expended all their money in the purchase of corn from the king's stores, Joseph persuades them to barter their lands, and afterwards lets them out, at a perpetual rent-tax of a fifth part of their produce.
3013	2303	1701	The seven years of famine end. [Others begin them in 1703.] [1696. Amun-m-gori (?) I. reigns in Egypt. W.]
3025	2315	1689	Jacob, on his death-bed, predicts the advent of the Messiah in the tribe of Judah, and expires at the age of 147. [1686. Amun-m-gori II. reigns in Egypt 35 years. The mines of the E. desert of Egypt already worked, and the port of Ænum or Philoteras (old Kossayr) probably already built for trade with Arabia. Osiriscon II. ascends the throne in 1651, commencing 17th dynasty. W.]
3079	2369	1635	Joseph foretells the egress of the Israelites from Egypt, desires to have his bones taken along with them, and dies at the age of 110, having been governor or prefect of Egypt during 80 years. — The history of the book of Genesis ends here, containing a period of 2369 years.
3096	2386	1621	[Amun-m-gori (?) III. ascends the Egyptian throne, and reigned at least 41 years. W.]

Thebes becomes a republic on the death of Xanthos.
[Remes X. in Egypt. W.]
The Æolians migrate to Asia Minor and the adjacent isles, to which they give the name of Æolia, 80 years before the migration of the Ionians.
Samson betrayed by Delilah. — His death. — Eli also dies, on hearing that his sons were slain in battle, and that the ark was taken by the Philistines. — Samuel, twelfth judge, succeeds to the high-priesthood, and obtains a signal victory over the Philistines, at Ebenezer.
About this time, the use of the mariner's compass is said to have been known in China.
[Reign of Chow closes, and with it the Shang or Yin dynasty. He was of infamous celebrity for his follies, lewdness, and crimes. With Ta-ke, his wife, he gave himself to unrestrained sensuality and extravagance; invented naked lascivious dances; built, in 10 years, a stage 1000 cubits high and a mile broad; laid out vast gardens; formed menageries; and built large granaries to feed those and the idle crowd; made a lake of wine, suspended meat on the trees around, and got together a vast number of naked men and women for shameless debaucheries. The general contempt this excited was cruelly punished. Pe-kan acquired immortal fame by falling a martyr to the hopeless task of reprobating bad kings. At last Woo-wang, solemnly appealing to Heaven, endeavored to rid the world of the tyrant, and defeated his army of 700,000 men; on which Chow fled to his stage, arrayed himself sumptuously, adorned with pearls and gems, and burnt himself to death. The capital was in Honan; the Chinese "gradually obtained a residence in the middle country," and hence called themselves Chung-kwo, "Middle Nation"; to the E. of them was a nation of "foreigners," more "numerous and stronger;" the Chinese were "small and feeble," say their historians.]
[Remes XI. ascends the Egyptian throne. W.]
[Close of the reign of Woo-wang, founder of the Chinese dynasty, Chow, commencing 1112, ending 243. In 1105, China had 23 states; in 760, 41 states.]
The Heraclidae return to the Peloponnesus.
On the death of Aristodemus, his twin-sons, Procles and Eurysthenes, reign jointly at Lacedemon; which double succession is continued for upwards of 800 years.
The 3d Chinese dynasty (called T'cheou) begins, and continues 855 years, under 35 emperors. [Morrison says, 1112.]
Samuel obtains his first victory over the Philistines at Ebenezer.
The Israelites desire a king, and Samuel anoints Saul. [Amunmai-Pœui (?) in Egypt. W.]
The kingdom of Sicon overthrown by the Hæraelidae, and included in that of Argos, or of Lacedemon.
[Amunomes (?) ascends the Egyptian throne; reigns till about 1068. W.]
Royalty abolished at Athens; the government of archons begins, under Medon.
David slays Goliath, the Philistine champion. — The next year, Samæl is directed to anoint him to be king of Israel, instead of Saul.
Samuel anoints David privately, by divine appointment.
The Pelagi are the second nation that acquires the maritime power of the Mediterranean.
Sael, worsted in battle by the Philistines, consults the witch of Endor, and kills himself the next day. — David begins to reign over a part of Israel; Ishboseth, son of Saul, reigning over the remainder.
On the death of Ishboseth, David succeeds to the whole kingdom of Israel; takes Jerusalem from the Jebusites, and makes it the seat of his government.
The Ionians migrate from Greece to Asia Minor, 60 years after the return of the Hæraelidae.
[Chow, the great Chinese historian, and inventor of the seal character.]
David, falling into the sins of adultery and murder, is reproved by Nathan, and repents.
Absalom, son of David, excites a rebellion in Israel, and is killed by Joab.
Solomon lays the foundation of the temple, in the fourth year of his reign, 480 years after the deliverance of Israel from Egypt. 1 K. 6:1.

3836	3126	878	Hazael, the Syrian general, having put Benhadad to death, reigns in his stead, according to the prophecy of Elisha, 2 K. 8: 12, 13.
3842	3132	872	The art of sculpture in marble supposed to be discovered. [Carving in stone known ages before.]
3845	3135	869	The city of Carthage built by Queen Dido, a Tyrian princess, who, to avoid the avrare of Pygmalion, had, with a few faithful followers, left her native land, and after wandering for some time in search of a settlement, fixed upon the coast of Africa. Some writers think that she only enlarged a town already built. — About the same period, Phidion, tyrant of Argos, invents scales and measures, or rather introduces them into Greece: he also first stamped silver money. [Scales were in use ages before in Egypt, and ring coins by weight; see the process on the monuments.]
3846	3136	863	The Cypriots are the 6th maritime power in the Mediterranean.
3854	3142	862	Jonah prophesies against Nineveh about this time. [Tnephetus and other Egyptian kings reigned about this time.]
3860	3148	856	[The period of 242 years, down to 606, that is included in the Chinese history Chou-tseu (i. e. "spring" and "autumn," being begun in one and finished in the other). It may be called Confucius's history of his own times. There were then 123 different states in China. An Eastern Chow is spoken of about 703; and a Western, in 1068; capital of the latter, Shen-se.]
3875	3165	839	The army of Hazael, the Syrian, desolates great part of Judah.

[Psammiticus, Psammutis, or Psammis (Psamatik II.), ascends the Egyptian throne.] Daniel interprets the first dream of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon.
 Jehoiachin, king of Judah, sent in irons to Babylon, by Nebuchadnezzar, who pillages the temple of all its riches, and sets up Zedekiah to be king.
 Cyaxares expels the Scythians from Upper Asia. Epimenides, of Crete, the first builder of temples in Greece, flourishes.
 [Vapheus, or Aprie (Psamatik III.), ascends the throne of Egypt; the Hophra of the SS.; but this is not certain. H.] Solon publishes his law at Athens.
 Thales of Miletus, after travelling into Egypt, returns to Greece and calculates eclipses, gives general notions of the universe, and maintains the unity of the Godhead, as he had received it from the Egyptian priests. Anaximander, his scholar, invents maps, globes, and, as some writers assert, the signs of the zodiac; though it is more than probable that they had been long before known both to the Egyptians and Chaldeans.
 The Pythian games first celebrated at Delphi.
 The war between Cyaxares, king of Media, and Halysates II., king of Lydia, begins, and continues six years.
 The city of Jerusalem, after a siege of 18 months, taken by Nebuchadnezzar, on the 19th June.
 The temple of Jerusalem turned to the ground, on the 7th day of the 5th month.
 A battle upon the river Halys, between Cyaxares and Halysates, interrupted by a total eclipse of the sun, on the 28th of May, as predicted by Thales, which brings the war to a conclusion, both armies retiring under dismal forebodings.
 Corinth, delivered from its tyrants, becomes a free republic. The Isthmian games restored.
 Moncy first reigned at Rome, by Tarquinus Priscus.
 The Megareanian war.
 The city of Tyre taken by Nebuchadnezzar, after a siege of 13 years.
 Apries, king of Egypt, dethroned by Nebuchadnezzar.
 Nebuchadnezzar sets up the golden image; Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, cast into the furnace for refusing to worship it, come out unharmed; Daniel interprets the king's second dream.
 Amosis, or Amasis (Ames Noits), ascends the throne of Egypt. He was not low born, as Herodotus supposes, but of a good family; an illustrious person, says Diod.; and he married the daughter of Psamatik III. He was a man of rank in the military caste. H.] Nebuchadnezzar becomes insane, and resides in the desert seven years, according to the prediction of Daniel. Egypt recovers its independence.
 The Nemanian games restored.—Phalaris, tyrant of Agrigentum.
 The Etrurians conquered by the Romans.
 The first census at Rome, 188 years from its foundation, when there appeared to be 81,700 citizens.
 Nebuchadnezzar restored, but survives only a few months.
 The first comedy at Athens, performed on a movable scaffold by Susarion and Dolon.
 The kingdom of Persia begins under Cyrus, grandson of Astyages (or Ahumerus, as some suppose), king of the Medes.
 Pisistratus first usurps the government of Athens.
 Cyrus, deposing his grandfather, becomes sovereign of the Medes and Persians.
 The temple of Apollo, at Delphi, burned by the Pisistratids, or sons of Pisistratus.
 The kingdom of Lydia ends, on the defeat of Croesus by Cyrus.
 The Phoenicians, forsaking their native country, settle in Gaul, where they build the city of Marseilles.
 Babylon taken by Cyrus, the same night in which Belshazzar (or Nabonidus) was surprised in the midst of his revelry by the hand writing against the wall of his palace.
 Darius the Mede (supposed to be the deposed Astyages) is made viceroy of Babylon, and holds that office about two years.
 Cyrus, master of all Asia, issues a decree for the restoration of the Jews to their own country, and for the rebuilding of the walls and temple of Jerusalem.

EPOCH VII.—FROM THE RESTORATION OF THE JEWS BY CYRUS, TO THE BEGINNING OF THE PELOPONNESIAN WAR; 105 YEARS.

4178 3468 61-1 218 536 Era of the Persian monarchy. — 42,360 Jews, besides proselytes and servants, to the number of 7337, return to Judea, under Zerubbabel, and Joshua, the priest.
 4179 3469 2 219 535 Thespis, the inventor of tragedy, performs his first piece at Athens, on a wagon.—The Arundelian Marbles place this 8 years sooner.
 4180 3470 3 220 534 The foundation of the second temple laid at Jerusalem, on the 29th of April.—Tarquinius Superbus, the last king of Rome, begins to reign the same year.
 4181 3474 62-3 221 530 Cyrus marches against the Scythians, and next year loses his life in a battle against Thomyris, queen of the Massagetae.—About the same time, the Samaritans begin to interrupt the Jews in the building of the temple.
 [From this period, say 514, to about 400, the principles of the ruling kings of China are thought to be the purest, and are quoted with veneration as the royal doctrines, the principles of the ancient kings.] The Jews adorandum and encouraged to proceed with the temple, by the prophets Haggai and Zechariah. A public library first founded at Athens, and learning encouraged.
 [Psammitichos, or Psammetichus, ascends the throne of Egypt. H.] Cambyses [Cambob of the Eg. hieroglyphics], the Persian, son and successor of Cyrus, conquers Egypt.
 4193 3483 64-4 223 521 Darius Hystaspis (the Ahuras of Esther) elected to the throne of Persia, on the death of the imposter Smerdis. [Egypt rebels. Nahr-eosh is his Eg. hierog. name.]
 4196 3486 65-3 226 518 Darius issues a second decree for rebuilding Jerusalem and its temple.
 4199 3489 66-2 239 515 The temple at Jerusalem finished, on the 10th of March: the passover celebrated on the 18th of April.

 4201 3494 3 214 510 The tyranny of the Pisistratids abolished at Athens, by the assistance of the Lacedemonians, and a democracy established.
 4205 3495 4 215 509 Tarquin and his family expelled Rome, on occasion of the rape of Lucretia; and the consular government begins, on the 25th of February (the Regifugium of the Roman calendar); Junius Brutus and Tarquinus Collatinus, the husband of Lucretia, being the first consuls.
 4206 3496 68-1 216 508 The first alliance between the Romans and Carthaginians.—Sybaris destroyed by those of Crotona routing their army of 300,000 with one less than 100,000.
 4207 3497 2 217 507 The second census taken at Rome, and there appears to have been 130,000 citizens.
 4208 3498 3 218 506 Megabysus, the Persian lieutenant in Europe, conquers Thrace and Macedonia.—Porsenna, king of Etruria, makes war against the Romans, as do the Sabines, in favor of the restoration of Tarquin.
 4210 3500 69-1 250 501 Sardis taken and burned by the Athenians, which occasions the Persian invasion of Greece.
 4211 3501 2 251 503 The lesser triumph, called Oration, begun at Rome, by Posthumius entering the city with a myrtle crown.
 4216 3506 70-3 256 498 The Ionians, after a revolt, subdued by the Persians, and the city of Miletus destroyed.
 4217 3507 4 257 497 The Roman people refusing to obey the senate and consuls, Lartius is appointed dictator, and invested with absolute authority for six months. — The Satumnia instituted. — 150,700 citizens.
 4219 3509 71-2 250 495 Tarquinius Superbus dies at Cumæ, whither he had retired on the close of the Latine war, at the age of 90, fourteen years after his expulsion from Rome, prior to which he had reigned 25 years.
 4221 3511 72-1 261 493 The populace of Rome, being discontented with the aristocracy, or patricians, retire to Mount Sacer, and threaten to build a new city; but by the persuasion of Menenius Agrippa, who invents the fable of the Belly and Limbs, they return, and are further appeased by the appointment of popular tribunes.
 Coriolanus banished from Rome. — Gelo usurps the government of Syracuse.
 The Persians defeated at Marathon, by Miltiades the Athenian.
 Coriolanus advances with an army of Volscians against Rome, but withdraws on the entreaty of his mother.
 Egypt revolts from the Persians, 4 years. — Darius makes Artabazus king of Pontus.
 The first agrarian law proposed at Rome, by Spurius Cassius. — Æschylus, at the age of 39, gains the first prize of tragedy, at Athens.
 Spurius Cassius thrown from the Tarpeian rock, after having been three times consul, for aspiring to the sovereignty. — The Voici and Æquii subdued.
 Xerxes [called in the Eg. hierog. 'Ksheersh'], king of Persia, recovers Egypt, and intrusts the government to his brother Achæmenes. — Aristides the Just banished from Athens.
 Questors first appointed at Rome for collecting the revenues and managing the public treasury. — An eruption of Mount Etna.

TABLE V.

Chronology of Remarkable Events, extending from B. C. 6, to A. D. 1519.

B.C.
6	Tiberius (afterward emperor) is invested by Augustus with the tribunitian power for five years; and soon after he retired to Rhodes. — Miraculous conception of John Baptist.
5	Caius Caesar, son of the emperor, the first who had the title of Princeps Juventutis , Prince of the Youth. He was at this time fifteen years of age. — Miraculous conception of JESUS CHRIST. — Birth of John Baptist.
5	Jesus Christ, the Son of God, born of the Virgin Mary, at Bethlehem, in Judea. — Wise men from the east, being guided by a star, come and worship the new-born King of the Jews.
3	Herod the Great, king of Judea, orders all the male children of Bethlehem, and its vicinity, under two years of age, to be put to death, in order to destroy Jesus Christ, who was providentially carried into Egypt before this cruel edict was put into execution.
2	Death of Herod the Great, in the 37th year of his reign. He is succeeded by his son Archelaus. — Death of Malthace, mother of Archelaus, king of Judea.
2	Death of Lucius, one of the sons of Augustus.
3	Death of Caius Caesar, son of Augustus, in consequence of a wound he had received in Armenia. — Augustus Cæsar is called Dominus , Lord, by the people; with which title he is displeased, and publicly forbade it by an edict. — About this time, the celebrated Pollio died at his country-house in Tuseulum, aged eighty. — Augustus Cæsar, who had, ten years before, been appointed to the government of the Roman empire, has the same conferred upon him for ten years more.
4	Tiberius returns from Rhodes to Rome, and is adopted by Augustus. — Tiberius receives again the tribunitian power. — Cinna , grandson to Pompey, is charged with being the chief of a conspiracy against the emperor, and afterward pardoned. — The temple of Janus, after it had been closed ever since B. C. 8, is opened again on account of fresh disturbances in Germany. — Tiberius subdues the Caninæ , the Atturii , the Bructeri , and the Cherusci , Germans, who had revolted from the Romans. — Augustus, that he might raise a tax in the Attalia , accepts of the proconsular power.
5	Tiberius extends his conquests to the Elbe, upon which the Germans sue for peace, which is granted them.
6	Revolt of the Pannonians and Dalmatians , against whom Tiberius and Germanicus are sent. — The Jews and Samaritans complain to Augustus of the tyranny of Archelaus.
7	Archelaus, king of Judea, deposed; and his dominions reduced into the form of a Roman province, and annexed to Syria. — Coponius was the first governor of Judea. — About this time, Judas of Galilee arose, and drew away much people after him; but he, and as many as obeyed him, were dispersed. Acts 5:37.
8	The Pannonians are again brought under subjection to the Romans. — Jesus Christ, twelve years of age, [hears, and questions] with the doctors in the temple, who are astonished at his understanding and answers.
9	Ovid banished by Augustus to Pomona , in Pontus . — Batou, the Dalmatian general, surrenders the town of Anduba to Germanicus, which puts an end to the Dalmatian war. — Memorable defeat of the Romans under P. Quintilius Varus, governor of Germany, by Arminius, chief of the revolted Germans.
10	Tiberius marches against the Germans; and, in the course of this and the following year, reduced the Germans again under the Roman yoke; upon which a profound peace takes place in the whole Roman world.
11	Tiberius, in consequence of his very important services, is made by Augustus his colleague in the empire, both in the civil and military government, August 28.
12	Imperial edict against diviners and astrologers.
13	Augustus Cæsar is again appointed emperor for ten years longer, the last prorogation expiring the end of this year.
14	Death of Augustus Cæsar (in the consulship of Sextus Pompeius and Sextus Apuleius) at Nola, August 19, being 76 years of age, all but 35 days. — There are four epochs from which historians date the years of this emperor's reign. The first is that of the second year of the Julian era, or the 70th of Rome; when, after the death of Julius Cæsar, coming from Macedonia into Italy, he took upon him the rank of emperor, without making any change in the republic, and assembled by private authority some veteran soldiers. The second epoch is the 3d year of the Julian era, or the 71st of Rome, when, after the death of the two consuls Hirtius and Pansa , he entered into the consulate with Q. Pedius, Sept. 22; or when, on the 27th of November following, he was declared triumvir with Mark Antony and Æmilius Lepidus . The 3d epoch is the third of September, A. U. C. 723, and the 15th of the Julian era, that is to say, on the day of the battle of Actium . The 4th epoch is the following year, when, after the death of Antony and Cleopatra, he entered triumphantly into Alexandria, the 29th of August, or the first day of the Egyptian year. Thus Augustus, according to the 1st epoch, reigned fifty-eight years, five months, and four days. This is the epoch which Josephus appears to have followed. According to the 2d epoch, Augustus reigned fifty-five years, ten months, and twenty-eight days, if we reckon from the time in which he was first made consul; or fifty-five years, eight months, and twenty-two days, from his becoming one of the triumviri . It is from one of these two periods that Suetonius , Eusebius , Epiphanius , and some others, compute the fifty-six years which they assign to this emperor. But the most common mode of computing the years of the reign of Augustus is, from

- A. D.
- the battle of Actium, from which time he lived and reigned forty-four years, all but thirteen days. — Tiberius Nero Caesar succeeds Augustus in the empire, August 19. — Death of Julia, daughter of Augustus, in the sixteenth year of her exile. - 65 Several great men conspire against the emperor; but the plot is discovered. — Death of Seneca and Lucan. — Campania wasted by an epidemical sickness and great tempests. — Great fire at Lyons, which nearly consumed the whole city. — Nero made the inhabitants of this city a present of four millions of sesterces (about thirty-two thousand pounds), toward repairing their losses.
- 66 Tiridates receives the crown of Armenia from the hands of Nero. — Vespasian sent by Nero to make war against the Jews. — Disturbances in Cesarea between the Jews and the idolaters who inhabited that city. — Sedition in Jerusalem, occasioned by Florus. This may be considered the proper commencement of the Jewish war. It took place, according to Josephus, on the 16th day of the month Artemisius, which, according to Scaliger's calculation, corresponds to our May. — The Jews of Cesarea slain, to the number of twenty thousand. — All Syria filled with slaughter by the battles between the Jews and the Syrians. — Cyprus and Macheortum taken by the Jews from the Romans. — Jerusalem besieged by Cestius Gallus. — The Christians leave Jerusalem, and fly to Pella, in Cœlosyria.
- 67 Vespasian invades Judea with an army of 60,000 men, and carries fire and sword wherever he goes: immense numbers of the Jews are slain in the various sieges. — The apostles Peter and Paul put to death about this time. — Jotapata taken by the Romans after a siege of forty-six days. — Japha taken by the Romans. — Eleven thousand six hundred Samaritans, that had assembled on the top of Mount Gerizim, slain by order of Vespasian. — Joppa taken and destroyed by the Romans. — Tarichea taken by the Romans, and nearly 40,000 persons, who had taken refuge in it, slain. — Death of Corbulo.
- 68 Dreadful calamities in Jerusalem, occasioned by the zealots, who divide themselves into two different parties, and murder one another by thousands, committing the most horrid cruelties. — The emperor Nero, on account of his great cruelty and injustice, is obliged to fly from Rome to the house of Phaon, one of his freedmen, about four miles from Rome, where he kills himself; upon which the senate declares Galba emperor.
- 69 On the kaleuds of January, the images of Galba, in Germany, are thrown down; and on the 3d day Vitellius is saluted emperor by the army; and on the fifteenth day of the same month, Galba is slain by the partisans of Otho, seven months after the death of Nero; upon which Otho is proclaimed emperor. — Civil war between Vitellius and Otho. — Engagement in an island in the Po, between the troops of Otho and Vitellius, wherein the latter have the advantage. — Battle of Bedriacum, in which Otho's army is defeated; upon which Otho kills himself, after a reign of three months. He is succeeded by Vitellius. — Dolabella put to death by order of Vitellius. — Civil war between Vitellius and Vespasian. — Cremona sacked by Primus. — Junius Bluesus poisoned by order of Vitellius. — Vespasian acknowledged emperor by a great part of Italy, and all the western provinces. — The capitol besieged and taken by Vitellius's soldiers. — The temple of Jupiter Capitolinus destroyed by fire. — Vitellius is killed, after a reign of eight months and a few days, and Vespasian succeeds him in the empire. — The Batavians, under Civilis, revolt from the Romans, over whom they obtain two great victories.
- 70 Vespasian orders the capitol to be rebuilt, the first stone of which was laid on the 21st of June. — Titus, son of Vespasian, sent by the emperor to besiege Jerusalem. — The Jewish temple burnt, notwithstanding the endeavors of Titus to preserve it. — Jerusalem taken Sept. 7, and destroyed by Titus, which ends the Jewish war. Josephus reckons that not less than eleven hundred thousand persons perished in this siege, by fire, sword, misery, and famine. If to this number he added all that were killed in the several battles fought out of Jerusalem, and in the taking of the several towns which the Romans stormed, it will be found that the Jews lost in the whole course of the war, one million three hundred and fifty-seven thousand six hundred and sixty men. The number of prisoners during the war, according to the same historian, amounted to ninety-seven thousand! See on Mat. 24.31.
- 71 Magnificent triumph of Vespasian for his victories over the Jews. — Peace being re-established in the world, the temple of Janus is shut. This is the sixth time of its being shut, according to Orosius.
- 72 Comagene is made a Roman province. — Vologeses, king of Parthia, molested by the Alans, a Scythian people, who overrun Media and Armenia.
- 73 Rhodes, Samos, and the neighboring islands, formed into a province, under the name of the Cyclades, or island province.
- 74 Vespasian, who had made his son Titus his colleague in the censorship, celebrates with him the ceremony of closing the Lustrum, and of numbering the Roman citizens.
- 75 Dedication of the temple of Peace. Vespasian places in it the golden vessels belonging to the temple of Jerusalem, and a great number of the finest performances of the best painters and sculptors. — Nero's Colossus, erected by his order at the entrance of the golden palace, is dedicated to Apollo, or the sun, by Vespasian.
- 76 Three cities in the island of Cyprus destroyed by an earthquake.
- 77 Dreadful plague in Rome, through which ten thousand persons are said to have died in one day!
- 78 Agricola appointed governor of Britain.
- 79 Vespasian dies, after a reign of nine years, eleven months, and twenty-four days, and is succeeded in the Roman empire by his son Titus. — Dreadful eruption of Mount Vesuvius, which devastated a considerable part of Campania. — Death of the elder Pliny, who was suffocated by the smoke and ashes from the mountain, while employed in examining this dreadful phenomenon.
- 80 Dreadful pestilence. — Terrible fire at Rome, which raged with great violence for three days and three nights. Many of the public buildings were destroyed; among which were the pantheum, the Octavian library, and the capitol, which had not been long rebuilt. — Dedication of the amphitheatre begun by Vespasian, and finished by Titus.
- 81 Titus dies on Sept. 13, after a reign of two years, two months, and twenty days; and is succeeded in the Roman empire by his brother Domitian.
- 82 Domitian's expedition against the Catti, a people of Germany. The emperor returns without having seen the enemy, and causes triumphal honors to be decreed him. It is supposed that about this time he received the surname of Germanicus.
- 83 Sabinius is made colleague with Domitian in the consulate: his praenomen is not known; but he is supposed to be the same with Oppius Sabinius, who lost his life soon after, in the Dacian war. — The Caledonians defeated by Agricola, with the loss of 10,000 men. The ornaments of triumph are decreed the victor. — The fleet of Agricola sailed round Great Britain: before this circumnavigation was made, the Romans were not sure that Britain was an island.
- 84 Domitian orders the nativity of all the great men in Rome to be cast; and such as were said to be born for empire he directs. — Philosophers banished from Rome by Domitian. — The Nasamonians revolt from the Romanians, but are subdued by Flaccus. — Fulvius is made colleague with the emperor this year in the consulate: his praenomen is not known. This Fulvius is supposed to be either T. Aurelius Fulvius, or Fulvius the grandfather of the emperor Titus Antoninus.
- 85 Institution of Capitoline games. — The Dacian war began this year, according to Eusebius. — The Dacians enter the Roman provinces, and make great depredations; but are at last completely overthrown by Julianos.
- 86 The Secular games celebrated at Rome this year, not because it was the termination of an even century from the building of the city, but through the mere caprice of the emperor.
- 87 Domitian banishes the astrologers from Rome.
- 88 The Marcomans, &c. having defeated the emperor, the latter makes peace with Decebalus, king of the Dacians, and allows him a yearly pension, which is never demanded. He assumes the surname of Daccius.

MUCH light may be thrown on the symbolical language of Scripture by a careful collation of the writings of the prophets with each other; for the symbolical language of the prophets is almost a science in itself. None can fully comprehend the depth, subdility, and force of their writings, who are not thoroughly acquainted with the peculiar and appropriate imagery they were accustomed to use. This is the main key to many of the prophecies, and without knowing how to apply it, the interpreter will often in vain essay to discover their hidden treasures. (See Vassiliev's Lectures, p. 240.)

The author of the present work has been content to consider symbols in the same light as emblems, though their meaning be somewhat distinct; his whole object being to throw light on some of the more obscure passages of Scripture, in which the symbolical language occurs, especially as symbols do not uniformly preserve the same signification, but are representatives of different subjects, according to the diversity of their properties and aspects. Thus iron, viewed merely as a metal difficult of fusion, denotes strength or power—when applied to the disposition, betokens stubbornness—and to the soil or ground, refers to its fertility; and so in numerous other cases; wherefore the subject to which the symbolical term is affixed must be viewed in its connection and immediate reference before its signification can be thoroughly ascertained.

Nor is it less to be observed, that the same symbol is employed to point out very different and even opposite persons or characters. Thus the serpent is generally the symbol of Satan, but it is also represented as the pattern of wisdom or caution; and the brazen serpent is a well-known type of Christ, being so alluded to by the Savior Himself. This mode of application is to be accounted for, by considering the various properties which any creature or thing is commonly supposed to possess, and by selecting the evil properties to picture out evil persons, and the good properties the reverse. For though among Christians the serpent and the tempter are generally identified, yet among heathen nations that reptile has often been viewed as the symbol of deity, and in the Egyptian hieroglyphics as emblematic of eternity.

Though the subject of sacred symbols has been already treated of by some, yet the number of writers in this department of theology is hitherto comparatively small. The reason of this may be, that, in order to illustrate the symbolical language properly, a very extensive acquaintance with ancient literature is requisite. The subject involves in it mythology, hieroglyphics, Oriental customs; in short, all the learning of Egypt and the East. To such endowments the present writer makes no pretension. It presented itself to him as a branch of study that might be profitably occupied as an exercise of the faculties, and as leading to various interesting and instructive inquiries. Had he possessed better resources, the work might have been proportionably improved. But his predecessors in this line of investigation were few; and had he not made a liberal, indeed an unreserved use of Daubuz's Dictionary, his own gleanings in this field of research must have been very scanty. The principal writers on the subject of symbols are as follows: Pierius in Hieroglyphica; Pierre L'Anglois, Discours des Hieroglyphes; Vitringa de Theologia Symbolica; Honnori Institutiones Theologie Typicae Emblematicae; Ewaldi Emblemata Sacra; Daubuz's Symbolical Dictionary. Other works no doubt exist, especially in the literature of Germany, and some of them possibly superior to those just named; but they are unknown in England: at least the author has in vain ransacked numerous catalogues to find them.

It is an observation of Maimonides, that 'he who would understand all that the prophets have said, must particularly apply himself to the study of the parabolic, metaphorical, and enigmatical parts of Scripture.' It has evidently seemed good to the great Author of revelation to clothe the mysteries of divine doctrine and prediction under the veil of emblems and figures—a mode which suited the genius of the Hebrew people and the nations of the East in general; on which account we find the books of the O. T., especially, filled with allegories of various kinds. The Egyptians appear to have been the earliest cultivators of this species of composition, and in this the Jews were rather imitators than originals. That this was a part of the wisdom of Egypt, in which Moses excelled, is suggested by Philo, in his Life of Moses, by Clemens of Alexandria, in his Stromata, and by many others. That the Chaldeans also were addicted to the use of emblems and allegories, appears from some ancient writers, for whom, see Stanley's History of Philosophy. The Syrians and Phoenicians are affirmed to have prosecuted the same study, according to Jerome, Josephus, Eusebius, &c.

The whole of the Levitical service was, as is allowed by all, an adumbration of the events, the doctrines, or the spiritual worship of the new dispensation, consisting of various figures, so as to deserve the name which Paul gives it, 1 Co. 2:7, 'the wisdom of God in a mystery,' or as described in He. 10:1, 'a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things.' Wherefore Abarbanel, Abenezra, Maimonides, and other judicious Jewish interpreters, have sought in the sacrifices and rites of the O. T., the images of future and spiritual things. Our Savior and his apostles use the same forms of speaking which the writers of the O. T. employed; and Buxtorf and Saubern have showed that some of the parables which Jesus uttered, in his addresses to the people, are to be found in the Talmud. Paul, on the other hand, has borrowed many of his allusions from the Pagan mysteries, the Grecian games, the Roman customs, and the like.

The wisdom of God wonderfully appears in making choice of this manner of revealing his will. For symbols, allegories, and metaphors, greatly sharpen the human intellect, afford food for serious meditations, and allure the mind to spiritual exercises.* Images thus borrowed from nature and art, from antiquity and from periods less remote, from national customs and religious rites, present a vast field of analogy, leading the faculties into a habit of comparing and examining, till every object becomes more or less fruitful of instruction. The student, being at length convinced that all this imagery is only a vehicle for conveying sublime and abstract truths, feels himself divested of many prejudices, and delivered from those false and absurd conceptions which he had previously formed respecting the nature, perfections, and operations of the Deity. Those anthropomorphic notions which he had before entertained, in consequence of reading familiarly of the divine hand, and arm, and eye—of the anger and repentance of God—or of the cup of his wrath—or of his incontinence—and all those other ideas which seem to limit ubiquity and circumscribe infinity, as well as to impute to the All Perfect mere human weaknesses—are laid aside as unworthy and unsuited to the Supreme Spirit. Neither can such a reader be deceived when he is informed of celestial nuptials, of sitting at table with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of heaven, so as to figure to himself carnal delights, where only spiritual joys are intended. An answer, too, is thus afforded to the snares and cavils of infidels and scoffers, who ridicule the language of Scripture, because it employs images drawn from common life; whereas this employment of the symbolical and figurative style, when rightly understood, constitutes much of the sublimity, gravity, and richness of the sacred volume. Had every thing in Scripture been strictly literal and plainly didactic, the Bible would have wanted half its charms.

It must, however, be owned, that here a luxuriant and uncined imagination must have no license. The symbols are not to be interpreted wantonly or applied rashly; all must be under the guidance of a sober, chaste, and pious judgment; afraid of giving forth that as divine truth which has its origin only in human fancy. As the priest approached the altar of old, not with a light step or giddy thoughts, but with the awe and solemnity which his office inspired, so we must investigate the meaning of the sacred emblems under deep impressions of the importance of divine truth.

Nor is the subject easily exhausted. The study of theology resolves itself into many parts, and the subdivision of labor is as needful here as in common sciences. What has been done for the elucidation of the symbolic language before now, as well as what is here attempted to be done, will still leave a vast plain to be traversed by others, where a harvest, rather than mere gleanings, may be gathered. A student taking the books of Moses only; another, the didactic parts of Scripture; a third, the Prophets; a fourth, the New Testament, would each find full and varied employment. The union of all their labors would barely suffice to illustrate the mystical parts of revelation.

It may be mentioned here, that the term symbol was anciently employed for several purposes. It was customary to call the apostles' creeds a symbol, from σύμβαλλειν, to throw or cast together, as if the apostles had each thrown in his article of belief to compose it—a notion completely dispensed by Lord King. The term was also applied to military watchwords or signs, by which the soldiers of an army could distinguish each other; so that the term in that sense corresponded to the Latin indicium. But the most frequent application of it was to the rites of the heathen religion, where those who were initiated in their mysteries, and admitted to the knowledge of their peculiar services, which were concealed from the greatest part of the idolatrous multitude, had certain signs or marks, called symbola, delivered to them, and, on declaration of these, were admitted, without scruple, in any temple, to the secret worship and rites of that god whose symbols they had received. These symbols were of two sorts, mute or vocal, concerning which those who would inquire further, may have recourse to Clemens Alexandrinus, to Arno-bius, to Julius Firmicus Maternus, and other ancient writers.

Some singular remarks respecting symbols appear to be contained in Dr. Stukeley's account of Abury, a temple of the Druids, in North Wiltshire. But by far the most ingenious account of the origin and use of hieroglyphical symbols is that given by the learned and acute Dr. Warburton, in his celebrated work, entitled 'The Divine Legation of Moses,' in which he has considered the subject at large, and has dissipated much of the darkness that previously rested upon it. An abstract of his reasoning may be seen in the Works of the Learned, for Sept. 1711, art. 14, and at the close of vol. 3 of Dr. Macknight's Commentary on the Apostolic Epistles. Dr. Warburton observes, that the tropical symbol sometimes assumed the form of a riddle, which in Scripture is called a dark saying, and he produces an example of it from Ez. 17:2, &c., which the reader will find illustrated in the following work, under the article Eagle.

Considerable use, in the illustration of symbols, has been made, by former authors, of the works of the oneirocritics, or interpreters of dreams—an art of very high antiquity, and of which Scripture carries the practice up to the time of Joseph, who interpreted the dream of Pharaoh. Dreams were considered as speculative or allegorical: the first is that which represents a plain and direct picture of the event predicted; the second, an oblique one, or a tropical and symbolical image of it. This latter is that kind only which needs an interpreter. If a man dreamed of a dragon, the oneirocritics assured him it signified majesty; when of a serpent, a disease; of a viper, money; of crows, adultery; of partridges, impious persons, &c. What foundation these interpreters had for their system it is not easy to say; but it must have been something more than the working of each man's private imagination, for the customers would require a settled analogy for the basis of their deciphering, and they would as naturally fly to some confused authority to support their science. This authority is conceived to have been the symbolic hieroglyphics; and as the gods were believed to have been the inventors of hieroglyphic learning, so it was natural to suppose, that these gods, who, in their opinion, sent dreams likewise, had employed the same manner of expression in both revelations.

Amidst the vast number of Scripture passages noticed or referred to in this work, the author was at a loss how to proceed. Had he simply referred to them by chapter and verse, it is much to be feared, through the hasty or indolent of readers, that many would have been overlooked. Had he, on the other hand, quoted them all, it would have greatly swelled the book. He has therefore tried to steer a middle course; and most of those he has quoted are expressed differently from the common version.

The references to Scripture and to profane authors are also generally contrived so as to avoid the too frequent introduction of Hebrew or Greek characters, which would have rendered the work repulsive to the English reader, as well as have increased the expense of publication.

* Some ancients and moderns, as is well known, contend for a fixed, invariable rule of analogy between things natural and things spiritual—but how to come at this rule? Ed.

SYMBOLICAL LANGUAGE OF SCRIPTURE.

ABY

A BYSS. Abyss literally signifies any great depth, and generally a mass of very deep waters. Symbolically, it may be understood of a hidden and confused multitude of persons. According to the Jews, the abyss was a place under the earth, in the most internal parts of it, and was thought to be a great receptacle of waters, as a reservoir to furnish all the springs or rivers. And this opinion was held by Plato, Homer, Seneca, and others, as well as by the Egyptians.

In Ge. 7:11, it is called the great deep, by way of eminence; or that vast body of waters which is conceived to exist in the hollow sphere or womb of earth, whence it was brought forth at the universal deluge,

Is. 51:10, "Art thou not it that dried up the sea, the waters of the great deep?" i. e. of that sea whose waters communicated with the great deep. This circumstance, as Parkhurst observes, greatly heightens the miracle.

Is. 44:27. What in the Seventy is abyss, is in the Hebrew deep. This refers to the method by which Cyrus took Babylon, viz. by laying the bed of the Euphrates dry, as mentioned by Xenophon and others. The same event is noticed in similar terms by Jer. 1:38 and 51:36. A parallel passage, in relation to Egypt, occurs in Is. 19:5, where the exhaustion of the country and its resources by foreign conquerors seems to be pointed out. These conquerors were Nebuchadnezzar and the Persian kings, whose yoke was very grievous.

Lu. 8:31, the term deep should be rendered the abyss, as Campbell justly observes. The sea, or deep, is expressed by a different word, τα βαθος. That the sea is not meant here, is evident; for to the sea the demons went of themselves, when permitted, at their own request, to enter into the swine.

Bo. 19:7, "Who shall descend into the abyss, to bring up Christ again from the dead?" i. e. as Campbell explains it, faith does not require, for our satisfaction, things impracticable, either to scale the heavens, or to explore the profound recesses of departed spirits. For the word abyss signifies a pit or gulf, if not bottomless, at least of an indeterminate depth; and must mean here more than the grave, since nothing is more practicable for the living than a descent thither. Besides, to call the grave the abyss, is entirely unexampled. Let it also be observed, that it is not said, "to bring Christ up from the grave," but from the dead, for which end, to bring back the soul is, in the first place, necessary. In this instance, the term abyss corresponds to Hades, which generally denotes the intermediate state, place, or receptacle of souls between death and the general resurrection.

The Greek term ἀβύσσος occurs in Re. 9:1, 2,11 and 11:7, in 17:8, and 20:1,3, in all which places it should be rendered, "the pit of the abyss"—the angel of the abyss—the key of the abyss, and so on. Gretius, on Lu. 8:31, observes, that the abyss or bottomless pit is the same that St. Peter calls Hell or Tartarus, 2 Pe. 2:4. This prison of Satan and his angels is represented in Re. 9:1, &c., as being permitted to be opened, by a righteous judgment of God, for the just punishment of apostate churches, who would not repent of their evil works. And as errors, delusions, and impurities blind the understanding, they are in the 2d verse compared to a great smoke, which hinders the sight, proceeding from the abyss. And truly, if interpreters are correct in applying this prophecy to Mahomet, the rise, progress, extent, and long continuance of his imposture may well be compared to a darkening smoke, issuing from the great abyss.

The confining Satan in the abyss for a thousand years, seems to be a figurative description of the restraint imposed upon all powers, that might either seduce men into error and wickedness, or persecute men of conscience, constancy, and faithfulness. During such a period, religion may be expected to flourish in purity and in peace. And this, perhaps, is the whole amount of what so many have dreamed, in relation to what is termed the Milennium.

The abyss sometimes signifies metaphorically grievous afflictions or calamities, in which, as in a sea, men seem ready to be overwhelmed, Ps. 42:7, and 71:20.

The pit, in Ez. 32:21 and 23, means the spacious sepulchre, full of receptacles hewn round about its sides, in which the dead were deposited. To this region of the dead, the land of the living is opposed.

ABADDON, on APOLLYON. Re. 9:11, "And they (the mystical locusts) had a king over them, who is the angel of the abyss, whose name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon."

Here the hordes of the Saracens are described as armed locusts, under a leader called the Exterminator, or Destroyer, for such is the meaning of the term above used. And this well agrees with the prophetic emblem, the distinguishing property of locusts being that of desolation; and still more with the military character of Mahomet and his successors the caliphs, who, in their wars for the propagation of the imposture, committed the most destructive invasions, and reduced many nations to misery and despair. The duration of these invasions and conquests is computed from the death of Mahomet in 632, until 732, in the reign of the empress Irene, and just before the accession of Haroun Alraschid to the caliphate, a term of five months or 150 days, reckoning each day for a year. But see under LOCUSTS.

Mede supposes, that there is an allusion in the word 'Abaddon' to the name of Obodas, the common name of the kings of that part of Arabia from whence Mahomet came, as Pharaoh was the common name of the kings of Egypt, and Caesar of the emperors of Rome—but the conjecture appears fanciful.

Poetique derives it from the root bad, 'to perish.' The Arabians call the desert Abbadus, i. e. the place of destruction, whence Abaddon, as it were, the Angel of the Desert. And Mahomet brought the Saracens out of this quarter, being, as Niephorus says, 'an unknown nation, coming from an inaccessible wilderness.'

ADULTERY is used symbolically to denote idolatry, or any departure from the law, worship, or service of God, which might be construed into unfaithfulness to that covenant which God condescends to describe as equivalent to the marriage contract, a figure frequently used to signify the relation in which he was pleased to stand to his people, speaking of them as a spouse, and of himself as their husband. Thus in Jer. 3:8,9, 52, 13:27, and other passages.

Also in Ez. 16:32, 23:27,43, &c.

And in Re. 2:22.

In Jer. 2:2, God reminds Israel, not of their affection to him, for they never showed much, as their history testifies, but of his to them, which was on his part perfectly gratuitous, and which led him to e-pouse them; that is, to engage in a special contract with them to be their God, and to take them for his peculiar people. In Jer. 3:14, where God says, 'For I am married to you,' or rather, 'For I have been a husband among you,' he reminds them, that he had fulfilled the covenant on his part, by protecting and blessing them as he had promised. And therefore, as they never had any reason to complain of him, he urges them to return to their duty, and promises in that case to be still kinder to them than before.

See also Jer. 31:32, and He. 8:9.

Jer. 13:27. Here Jerusalem is reproached with having practised her idolatry in such a deliberate manner, as showed it to proceed from a steady attachment, which, at the same time, she was at no pains to disguise, having chosen the most public places for the scene of her wickedness.

ALT

AIR. The air may be considered as the mansion of evil spirits, of whom Satan is the chief. In this view, it may denote the jurisdiction of those invisible powers, which powers symbolically represent their visible agents and instruments on earth.

It was the opinion of Pythagoras, as Diogenes Laertius mentions, that 'all the air was full of souls or spirits, and that these were they who were thought to be demons or heroes—that by them dreams were sent to men,' &c.

The Jews also believed, that, from the earth to the firmament, all things were full of these companies or rulers, and that there was a prince over them, who was called the Governor of the World, that is, of the darkness of it.

Ep. 6:12, 'The prince of the power of the air.'

The power of the air, says Chandler, signifies that government and dominion which is exercised by evil spirits, who are supposed to have their habitation assigned them in the air above us; and who are represented in Scripture as subject to one, who is the head or prince over them, the author of their apostasy from God, and their leader in their rebellion against him; called here 'the prince of the power of the air,' or of that government which is exercised in the regions of the air, and amongst wicked and apostate spirits, who now work in or amongst the children of disobedience, influencing them to continue in their idolatry and vices, and to refuse submission to the gospel of the Son of God.

Re. 9:2, 'The sun and the air were darkened,' A dark smoke is said to issue from the pit or abyss, so thick that it intercepted the light of the sun, and obscured the whole air; a just representation of great errors, such as those of Mahomet, who is here thought to be pointed at, darkening the understanding, obscuring the truth, and attended with violence and destruction.

Re. 16:17, 'The angel poured out his vial into the air.'

The pouring out the vial into the air, is a proper expression to point out the very seat and foundation of Satan's power and authority as god of this world, and to denote the restraining of that power, so that he shall no longer be able to prevail, either to corrupt the truth of Christianity, or to persecute its faithful professors.

The air, as the midst of heaven, or the middle station between heaven and earth, may symbolically represent the place where the Divine judgments are pronounced. Thus, in 1 Ch. 21:10, it is said, 'David saw the angel of the Lord stand between the earth and the heaven,' when about to destroy Jerusalem by the pestilence. The hovering of the angel showed, that there was still time by prayer to avert the judgment. It had not yet fallen upon the earth, nor as yet done any execution.

ALTAR. An altar, both among the Jews and the heathen, was an asylum—a sanctuary—for such persons as fled to it for refuge. This appears from Ex. 21:13, M. 1 K. 4:50, 1 K. 22, and other passages.

And as to the practice of the heathen in this respect, all the Greek writers are more or less copious.

See under HORNS.

He. 13:10, 'We have an altar,' &c.

The Christian altar, i. e. the table of the Lord, considered as furnished with the memorials of the sacrifice of his death, of which memorials Christians are to partake, but of which they have no right to eat, who serve the tabernacle. So Parkhurst.

But Macknight explains it thus: 'Here, by a usual metonymy, the altar is put for the sacrifice, as is plain from the apostle's adding, "of which they have no right to eat." This is the sacrifice which Christ offered for the sins of the world; and the eating of it does not mean corporal eating, but the partaking of the pardon which Christ, by that sacrifice, had procured for sinners.

Re. 8:3, 'Offer it with prayers on the golden altar.'

Re. 9:13, 'From the horns of the golden altar.'

In these two passages, the securty is taken from the holy place, where the priest used to officiate in the worship of the Jews; there being, in this representation of the heavenly presence, no veil, and so no distinction between the holy and most holy place.

Altars were built of stones, which, in the case of those erected to the true God, were forbid to be hewn, Ex. 20:25; Jos. 8:31, 1 K. 18:31, 1 S. 6:14. The Gentiles imitated the same, as appears from Pausanias, b. vi. p. 382, where he mentions 'an altar of white stone'; and Apollonius Rhodius, in speaking of the temple of Mars, Argon, b. ii. —

'And all devoutly round the altar stood;

'This of small stones composed, was placed before
The lofty temple's double folding-door:
Within the fane a stone of stable hue:
Stood, where the Amazons their victims slew.'

Flutes.

The tombs, says Bryant, in his Mythology, of which frequent mention is made by the ancient writers, were in reality high altars or pillars, and not, as has been supposed, monuments erected in honor of the dead. Such a one the Argonauts are said to have found in the temple of Mars, when they landed upon the coast of Pontus. This was the express object to which the Amazonians paid their adoration, as they lived in an age when statues were not known.

Altars were generally erected at the gates of the city. See 2 K. 23:8. And we may refer to this Ac. 14:13, where the priest of Jupiter is said to have brought filleted oxen to the gates, to perform sacrifice.

It is observable, that Bouos in the Greek, and Ara in the Latin, is used only of an altar erected in honor of idols; whilst that for the service of the true God, is constantly called Svartorion in Greek, and Altare in Latin.

One wooden table was wont to be placed in the midst of every meeting-place of the primitive Christians, upon which each of them laid what he bestowed for the use of the poor, as we are informed by Theodore, h. v. c. 18, (see He. 12:16;) and because alms are noted with the name of sacrifice, that table upon which they were laid was called by the ancient Christians an altar.

ANGEL. A name, not of nature, but of office, as Austin observes. Both the Hebrew and Greek terms signify messenger.

In the prophetic style, every thing is called an angel, that notifies a message from God, or executes the will of God. A prophetic dream is an angel. The pillar of fire, that went before the Israelites, is called God's angel. The winds and flames of fire are angels to us, when used by God as voices to teach us, or as rods to punish us. So that God is properly said to reveal by his angel, what he makes known, either by voice, by dream, by vision, or any other manner of true prophetic revelation. Secular princes may, in some such sense, be termed angels. See 2 S. 14:17, 20.

The Angel of a Nation denotes its king or ruler.

Ecclesiastical officers are named angels in the Epistles to the Seven Churches, the chief pastor of each church being addressed by that title.

Angel, simply taken, sometimes signifies any visible agent made use of by God in bringing about the designs of his providence.

Angel from the Altar signifies an ecclesiastical minister.

Angel of the Waters, Re. 16:5. Rivers and fountains of waters may not unfitly signify the original countries or seats of empires, in distinction from the provinces; and the angel here denotes the minister or instrument employed in executing this judgment of God upon the kingdom of the Beast.

Angel who had power over Fire, Re. 14:18, signifies the minister of God's vengeance having power over fire, which is the emblem of his wrath. So the priest in the ancient temple service, who had charge of the fire on the altar, was called the priest over fire. See FIRE.

Rulers have the same name given them, Ro. 13:6, as is given to angels in He. 1:14, with the necessary exception of the term spirits.

The Angel of the Bottomless Pit, Re. 9:9. These figurative locusts are represented as having a king, though the natural locusts, as Agur observes (Pr. 30:27), have none; and this king is that evil spirit, who, from the constant mischief he is doing in the world, is called the Destroyer.

Four Angels bound on the Euphrates, Re. 9:14. See FOUR.

Michael and his angels, Re. 12:7. This state of the church is described under the form of a severe contest between faithful Christians and the abettors of idolatry, wickedness, and error, which should terminate in a complete victory over the enemies of true religion.

But see this text further illustrated under SEVEN.

ARM. The symbol of strength or power.

Ps. 10:15, 'Break thou the arm of the wicked; diminish or destroy his power.'

Ez. 30:21, 'I have broken the arm of Pharaoh, king of Egypt. See the same image in Jer. 48:25.

Put to denote the infinite power of God : Ps. 89:13, 'Thou hast a mighty arm.' Ps. 98:1, 'His holy arm hath gotten him the victory.' Is. 53:1, 'To whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?' i. e. his power in making the gospel effectual. See Jn. 12:38.

Ez. 6:6, 'I will redeem you with a stretched-out arm,' i. e. with a power fully exerted; and so in other passages. The metaphor is taken from the attitude of warriors baring and stretching out the arm to fight, after removing every impediment to its action. Thus in Is. 52:10, 'Jehovah hath made bare his holy arm in the sight of all the nations.' And it is under the same figure, though not the same term, that Paul, speaking of the gospel, Ro. 1:16, says, 'It is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth.'

Is. 9:20, 'They shall eat every one the flesh of his own arm.' Bishop Lowth has here corrected the reading, from the Seventy and other versions, and shown that it should be 'the flesh of his neighbor,' similar to Jer. 19:9; that is, they shall harass and destroy one another. See his note on the place.

ARROW. The symbol of calamities or diseases inflicted by God. Thus Jb. 34:6, which our translators have rendered, 'My wound is incurable without transgression,' should be translated, 'I am desperately pierced through by arrows.'

See also Jb. 6:4, Ps. 38:2; De. 32:23; and compare Ez. 5:16; Zch. 9:14.

Ovid has this passage :

'Non mea sunt summa leviter districta exulta.
Pectora descendit vultus ad casum meum.'

It is also applied figuratively to lightnings, which are God's arrows. See Ps. 18:15, Ps. 45:6; Da. 3:11; and compare Wisd. 5:21, 2 S. 22:15.

On Ha. 3:11, Calvin says, that the arrows and spears of the Israelites are called those of God, under whose auspices his people fought; or the instruments of destruction which God employed (Jos. 10:11), may be metaphorically called his arrows and spears.

Sometimes arrow denotes some sudden and inevitable danger, as in Ps. 91:5, 'The arrow that dieth by day.'

Also any thing injurious, as a deceitful tongue, Ps. 129:4; Jer. 9:7; a bitter word, Ps. 64:4; a false testimony, Pr. 25:18.

On the other hand, it is used to signify well-educated children, Ps. 127:4,5. The gate was the place of resort for public business and justice, under the portico that belonged to it. Children would support a man there, in his contests and pretensions; according to the rendering of the Chaldee, 'They shall not be put to shame, when they contend with their adversaries in the gate of the judgment-hall.'

The term 'arrow' is specially applied to the word of God in the hands of the Messiah, Ps. 45:6; Is. 49:2; on which last passage see Bishop Lowth's excellent note.

Ez. 21:21, 'To use divination, he mingled his arrows.'

Divination by arrows was an ancient method of presaging future events. Jerome says, the manner was thus: They wrote on several arrows the names of the cities against which they intended to make war, and then, putting them all into a quiver promiscuously, they caused them to be drawn out in the manner of lots, and that city whose name was on the arrow first drawn out, was the first they assailed. Nebuchadnezzar is here represented as acting thus; — he comes to the head of two roads, mingles his arrows in a quiver, that he might thence divine in what direction to pursue his march, — he consults teraphim, and inspects the livers of beasts, in order to determine his resolution. See Potter's Arch. Graec., v. 1, b. 2, p. 16.

Seven divining arrows were kept at the temple of Mecca; but generally, in divination, the idolatrous Arabs made use of three only, on one of which was written, 'My Lord hath commanded me'; on another, 'My Lord hath forbidden me'; and the third was left blank, if the first was drawn, they looked on it as an approbation of the enterprise in question; if the second, they made a contrary conclusion; but if the third happened to be drawn, they mixed them, and drew over again, till a decisive answer was given by one of the others. Sale's Koran, Prelin. Disc. p. 126. Porocke's Spec. Hist. Arash, p. 329, is referred to by Mr. Lowth, as treating fully of this mode of divination. See Hn. 4:12.

Ez. 21:22, 'Towards his right hand fell the divination against Jerusalem.'

Supposing the face towards the east, the southern branch of the two roads, which was towards the right hand, led to Jerusalem, for this city lay to the south of Rabba. You must represent Nebuchadnezzar as coming from Dan, and marching along the Jordan. Here Rabba was situated at the left hand, and Jerusalem at the right. (Michæls.)

ASHES. The symbol of human frailty, Ge. 18:27; of deep humiliation, Est. 4:1; Jon. 3:5; Mat. 11:21. Lu. 10:13; Jl. 4:26; Da. 9:3; a ceremonial mode of purification, He. 9:13; they are likened to hoar-frost, Ps. 147:16.

In Ez. 27:30, we find the mourning Tyrians described as wallowing in ashes; and we may remark that the Greeks had the like custom of strewing themselves with ashes in mourning. Thus Homer, Iliad, 18, line 22, &c., speaking of Achilles bewailing the death of Patroclus :

'Cast on the ground, with furious hands he spread

'The scorching asbes o'er his graceful head:

'His purple garments, and his golden hairs,

'Those he deforms with dust, and these he tears.'

Lucretius shows his grief in the same manner, Odys. 24, l. 315:

'Deep from his soul he sighed, and sorrowing spread
A cloud of ashes on his hoary head.'

Is. 4:10, 'He feedeth on ashes.' He feedeth on that which affordeth no nourishment; a proverbial expression for using ineffectual means, and bestowing labor to no purpose. In the same sense Hosea says, ch. 12:1, 'Ephraim feedeth on wind.' See Lowth in loc.

Is. 61:3, 'A beautiful crown instead of ashes.' See Lowth's note. A chaplet, crown, or other ornament of the head, instead of dust and ashes, which before covered it; and the costly ointments, used on occasions of festivity, instead of the ensigns of sorrow. See 2 S. 14:2; Judith 10:3.

Maximus Tyrius, referring to this custom among the heathen, Dies. 30, p. 306, observes, 'Let men lament and implore ever so much, or pour ever so much dust upon their heads, God will not grant what ought not to be granted.'

Jb. 2:8, 'And he sat down among the ashes.' So Ulysses in Odyssey, b. 7, l. 153:

'Then to the general earth he lowered his face,
And humbled in the ashes took his place.'

See also II. 18, v. 26.

Ps. 102:9, 'I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping,' i. e. I have eaten the bread of humiliation, and drank the water of affliction; ashes being the emblem of the one, and tears the consequence of the other. See Horne on the text.

AXE. The symbol of the divine judgments. Sometimes applied to a human instrument, as in Is. 10:15, 'Shall the axe boast itself against him that beareth therewith?' i. e. shall the proud king of Assyria boast himself against God, whose instrument he is to execute his purposes? Jer. 51:20,

'O battle-axe, thou shalt be my weapon of war,

'And with dice will I break in pieces nations.'

The army of the Medes and Persians is most probably here intended; as elsewhere the instrument of God's vengeance is called a sword, a rod, a scourge, (Blayney.) See also Jer. 46:22.

And by axes, which were a part of the insignia of the Roman magistracy, was denoted the power of life and death, and of supreme judgment. Whence Cicero, in his Orat. in Verr. says, 'O Dii immortales, proclarum defensionem, intercavent cum imperio ac securibus, in provinciam misimis.'

The most common use of the axe, as is well known, is to cut down trees; hence the expression in Mat. 3:10; and Luke 3:9, 'the axe is laid at the root of the trees.'

Silius Italicus, lib. 10, has,

'Agmine protervum lucis, sonata lata bipenni.

Populus alba.'

See also Virgil, Aen. 6, v. 180,

'Procombunt piceas, sonata lata securibus Ilex

'Fraxineaque trabes: curcas et fastigie robur

'Scindunt: advolvunt ingens montis osmos.'

Hence we find such expressions as these in Is. 10:33,

'Behold Jehovah, the Lord of hosts,

'Shall top the flourishing branch with a dreadful crash,

'And the high of stature shall be cut down,

'And the lofty shall be brought low;

'But he shall hew the thickets of the forest with iron,

'And Lebanon shall fall by a mighty hand.'

The axe was also used as the instrument of decimation, to which there is allusion in Re. 20:4, 'The souls of them that were beheaded for the testimony of Jesus,' literally, 'cut with an axe.'

Axes were also used in war; hence Sidonius,

Carm. El. 5, v. 247,

'Excusare citas rastum per hinc secutus.'

And Horace, b. 4, Ode 4,

'Amazona securi dextras obmetat.'

Also in Carm. Secul. v. 54,

'Jam mari terraque manus potentem'

'Medus, Albanaque tueri securis.'

And Virgil, En. 2, v. 480,

'Ipsa inter primos corripita dura bipenni'

'Lanosa petrum, postquam a carine velutina.'

Axes were used in sacrifice; hence Virgil,

'Quales magistris fugit cum auxiliis aras'

'Tauris et iacetum excusat service securis.'

And Ovid, b. 12, Metam.

'Candida curu'

'Rumpere sacrificia molitor collis securis.'

This sacrificial axe was called the axo of the Hierophant. These are seen on various coins.

'The axe is laid at the root of the trees.'

That trees are a general symbol of men, is well known. See under FOREST and TREE.

See also Ez. 31: 3; Da. 4:7-8; Mat. 7:19; and 12:33. Ps. 1:3; Zeph. 1:12, 2.

What John Baptist, therefore, refers to, is probably the excision of the Jewish nation. The tree of the Jewish commonwealth was to be rooted up by the axe of the divine judgment, and they were to remain, for many days, without a king, without a priest, without an epiphod, and without sacrifices. How thoroughly this was done, Josephus tells us, b. 7, de Bello Jud. c. 1: 'It was miserable to behold that country, formerly covered with trees and fertile plants, now lying plain like a desert; neither was there any stranger, who before had seen Judea, and the beautiful suburbs of Jerusalem, who, now beholding it, could abstain from tears, and not lament so woful a change.' For this war extinguished utterly all signs of beauty; neither could one coming suddenly know the place which he well knew before.' Others, however, are disposed to interpret the passage in Mat. 3:10, as simply meaning the approaching gospel season, by the preaching of which, such methods should be taken in the course of divine providence, for the subduing and mortifying the power of sin among mankind, which, if not properly improved, would dreadfully aggravate the guilt of those still remaining in their sins, notwithstanding their possession of it.

When Paul says, Phil. 1:17, that he was set for the defence of the gospel, the original word is the same with that in this passage answering to laid, viz. καταποιειν.

ASS, as animal of a patient, laborious, and stupid nature, the emblem of persons of a similar disposition.

Issachar is called a strong ass, Ge. 49:14, in reference to his descendants, as being a settled agricultural tribe, who cultivated their own territory with patient labor, emblematised by the ass. We rarely read of Issachar being engaged in any war, which is ever hostile to agriculture.

Of Jehoiakim it is said, in Jer. 22:19,

'With the burial of an ass shall be buried, dragged along.'

And cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.'

an event mentioned by Josephus, who says,

'that the king of Babylon advanced with an army, that Jehoiakim submitted him readily to Jerusalem, and that Nebuchadnezzar, having entered the city, instantly put him to death, and cast his dead body unburied without the walls.'

It is recorded of Christ in Zeh. 9:9, and quoted thence in Mat. 21:5, that He should be

'Humble, and sitting on an ass.'

Even on a colt the foal of an ass.'

As horses were used in war, Christ may be supposed, by this action, to have shewn the humble and peaceful nature of his kingdom.

The Wild Ass, which is more than once mentioned in Scripture, is a very different creature from the common ass in most of its qualities. Ephraim is compared to them, in Ho. 8:9, i. e., he was untamed to the yoke, and traversed the desert as earnestly in the pursuit of idols as the onger in quest of his mates.

Though wild asses, says Pococke, he often found in the desert in whole herds, yet it is usual for some one of them to break away, and separate himself from his company, and run alone at random by himself.

They are described by Jer. 13:6, as

'snuffing up the wind like dragons, i. e., they suck in the air for water to cool their internal heat.'

Allian describes serpents as doing the same;

and Varro thus speaks of the ox,

'Et bos augeles exstum (mimbo) rito,

'Natura actum patula deservit adoratio.'

See more in Blayney.

Job 39:5, 'Who hath sent out the wild ass free?' It seems to have no affinity with the common ass, but in the name, for it is beautiful, excessively swift, and wild.

The paraphrase of Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, a Catholic writer, on Re. 17:5, is remarkable, as admitting Rome to be the city intended by St. John. 'Babylon (says he) is meant by the name of the Whore, and Rome by Babylon. This is the most natural sense. We see, then, why St. John represents Rome under the name of Babylon, as she had all the characters of Babylon, an empire full of idols and divinations, and a persecutor of the saints, as she was.' But then the bishop probably applied this to Rome Pagan. Had Rome Pagan persecuted the saints as she did, it could have excited no astonishment in the apostle's mind;

but he might well greatly wonder, as Lowman observes, that Rome Christian, once so famous for purity of faith, and patient suffering for the profession of the truth, should become another Babylon for idolatry and persecution. From hence Protestant interpreters may with reason infer, that this vision does not represent the persecution of Rome Heathen, but of Rome Anti Christian.

BALANCE, the known symbol of a strict observation of justice and fair dealing. It is thus used in several places of Scripture, as Jn. 31:6; Ps. 62:9; Pr. 11:1, and 16:11, and is so explained by the Indian Interpreter, ch. 15, and by all the interpreters in ch. 242.

But balance, joined with symbols denoting the size of corn and fruits by weight, becomes the symbol of scarcity; bread by weight being a curse, in Le. 26:29; and in Ez. 4:16, 17.

'Moreover he said unto me: Son of man,

'Lo, I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem;

'And they shall eat bread by weight and with care,

'And they shall drink water by measure and with astonishment:

'That they may want bread and water,

'And be astonished one with another,

'And pine away in their iniquity.'

A case which Lucretius describes, b. 4, 948,

'Et quoniam non est quasi quod sufficiat artus,

'Debet fit corporis, longissime omnia membra,

'Brachia palpebre cadunt, poplitea procumbunt,'

The same curse is expressed by famine, in

Ez. 5:16, and 14:13. And therefore the Holy Spirit, which in the gospel dispensation is said to be shed richly or abundantly, Ti. 3:6, is said in Jn. 3:34, not to be given by measure. So whereas grace is said to be given according to the measure of the gift of Christ, Ep. 4:7; that measure is understood to be, 'out of his fulness, and grace upon grace,' Jn. 1:16.

Re. 6:5, 'He that sat upon him had a pair of balances in his hand.' Here the balance, which in general is a representation of exact justice and righteous judgment, is used to weigh corn and the necessities of life, in order to signify a great want and scarcity, and to threaten the world with famine.

The rider sits on a black horse, and black, in ancient prophecy, is an emblem of affliction, and in particular of affliction caused by famine.

Thus Jerem. in La. 5:10, says, 'Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine,' referring to the effects of hunger in emaciating the body, and drying the skin.

The scarcity is farther denoted by the price of a sheaf or measure of wheat, being a peni-ty or denarius, i. e., the whole wages of a man's labor for a day (Mat. 20:2), would only purchase so much corn as would suffice for a usual daily allowance; so that all he could get must be laid out on the very necessities of life.

The fulfilment of this prophecy is referred by most commentators to the times of Septimius

Severus. See Newton, Daniluz, Lowman, and others.

To this period it is thought Tertullian refers in his address to Scapula, when he mentions unfavorable harvests and heavy rains.

But Mede is of a different opinion, and refers it not to a season of scarcity, but to the regard had to justice and equity by Severus in the administration of his government; that he preserved an even balance among all, and to the supplies of corn he procured for his subjects in seasons of famine. And the character given of this emperor by Aurelius Victor, Spartan, and others, seems to warrant this opinion.

The passage referred to in the Indian Interpreter, ch. 15, is as follows: 'Si quis in somnis statuum vel calidum quod vocant (genus est statera) loco quotidie libari viderit, ea de persona Iudicis intelligat. Quid si item habet, ea inter librandum ea viderit esequari; jus sumi obtinet.'

'Si statuum aquatum parumque videre videatur, Iudicem loci justum esse cognoscit; sin

perversa fractaque lances viderit, ejus loci

Iudicem, quo loco somnum vidit, injunctum cogitet.'

BEAR, Da. 7:5, 'Another beast, a second like to a bear.'

Re. 13:2, 'His feet were as the feet of a bear.'

The bear, according to the Persian Interpreter, in ch. 274, signifies a rich, powerful, and fool-hardy enemy. See Pr. 17:12; 2 S. 17:

8; Ig. 13:8.

According to Aristotle, the bear is a greedy animal, as well as silly and fool-hardy. His name in Hebrew, dowb, the grumbler, seems to be taken from his grumbling or growling, especially when hungry or enraged. See Buffon remarks, t. 8, 'La voix de l'ours est un grognement, un gros murmure, souvent mêlé d'un fremissement de dents qu'il fait sur tout lorsqu', on l'irrite.' Compare Is. 59:11,

'We groan all of us like the bears;

'And like the doves, we make a continued moan.'

This growl the Latin writers express by gem-

tus, because it is a disagreeable, unpleasant sound. So Horace, Epod. 16, line 51,

' Nec Vesperthus circumgenit Ursus ovibus.'

' Nor growls about the bold the evening bear.'

And Ovid, Metam. b. 2, l. 483,

' Vox iracula, monoxippe,
Plenius tenoris rancor de gitter feritur.
Aspidochelone genita testa dolores.'

' From her harshe throat proceeds a horrid voice,

And with perpetual groan attesteth her griefs.'

Is. 11:7, ' And the cow and the bear shall feed,' i. e., men of ferocious dispositions shall become mild and placable, and shall associate with those who were gentle and harmless.

Ho. 13:8, ' As a bear bereaved of her whelps.' A circumstance, as Newcome observes, which adds a particular degree of fierceness. They never venture, says Cook in his Voyages, vol. iii. p. 307, to fire upon a young bear when the mother is near, for if the cub drop, she becomes enraged to a degree little short of madness; and if she get sight of the enemy, will only quit her revenge with her life.

Re. 13:2, ' The feet of a bear.' The bear's feet are his best arms, with which he fights, either striking or embracing his antagonist, to squeeze him to death, or to trample him under foot.

Danubuz refers this prophecy to the invasion of the Roman empire by the barbarians, of whom the Scythians and Germans in particular were very softish, ignorant, and cruel.

Da. 7:5, ' A second beast, like to a bear.' The bear is well known to be a rapacious animal, and the command here given to it indicates its nature. The three projections are called in our version ribs; but the original word oloin seems to denote something prominent or penetrating, and hence the term tusk is more natural and agreeable, especially as they are placed in the mouth or jaws, for so Houbigant renders it. The three tusks may refer to the three different points to which the Persians, denoted by the bear, pushed their conquests. Coming from the east, they invaded the western, southern, and northern territories. And thus we read in ch. 8:4, that the ram pushed westward, and northward, and southward. And that great havoc among the human race was made by the Persians, may be learned from Jer. 51:56, and also from the revolt of the Hyrcaniens, and of Gobryas in the 4th book, and from other parts of the Cyropaedia, as well as from most of the historians.

BEAST. WILD BEAST, the symbol of a tyrannical, usurping power or monarchy, that destroys its neighbors or subjects, and preys upon all about it, and persecutes the church of God.

The four beasts, in Da. 7:3, are explained in verse 17, of four kings or kingdoms, as the word king is interpreted, verse 23.

In several other places of Scripture, wild beasts are the symbol of tyrannical powers, as in Ez. 34:28, and Jer. 12:9, where the beasts of the field are explained, by the Targum, of the kings of the heathen and their armies.

Amongst profane authors, the comparison of cruel governors to savage beasts is obvious; and Horace calls the Roman people a many-headed beast. Lib. i. Ep. 1, v. 76.

And as for the oenoecrities, wild beasts are generally the symbols of enemies, whose malice and power are to be judged of in proportion to the nature and magnitude of the wild beasts they are represented by.

The seven heads of the beast, in Re. 17:9, 10, have a twofold signification. 1st, They are seven mountains or hills, on which the metropolis of the beast is situated. 2d, They are seven successive orders or kinds of government, viz. Kings—Consuls—Tribunes—Decemvirs—Dictators—Emperors—The kingdom of the Goths in Italy. Tacitus, Annals, b. i. c. 1, expressly says, ' Rome was first governed by kings, then by consuls, by dictators, by decemvirs, by military tribunes with consular authority.'

After these seven forms became extinct, the popedom appeared in all its rigor, and has continued ever since as the eighth head of the beast; but it is said, verse 11, ' He goeth into perdition,' i. e., he shall be utterly destroyed, nor can his fate be far distant.

The rising of a beast signifies the rise of some new dominion or government; the rising of a wild beast, the rise of a tyrannical government; and rising out of the sea, that it should owe its origin to the commotions of the people. So waters are interpreted by the angel, Re. 17: 15. In the visions of Daniel, the four great monarchies, are represented rising out of the sea in a storm. ' I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great seas, and four great beasts came up from the sea.' Da. 7:23.

Campbell de Monarch. Hispan. App. p. 599, suggests, that the founders of the four monarchies are called beasts, on account of the savage and cruel measures they pursued. ' Et quia omnes quatuor monarchiarum fundatores Minord humi scenti, contra naturalem institutionem, eteras nationes multa justa de causa, sed maxima ambitione et regnandi cupiditate exstinxerunt, utique illa monstrosa etiam propheta sub nomine terrarum bestiarum designata fuerit, ad satyram et inimicitudinem illos denotandos.'

May we not add, that all earthly governments do and will partake of the bestial character, until they assimilate more to the nature and laws of Christianity, than their abstinence from sanguinary wars, from national pride, from the worship of mammon, from unjust and partial legislation, and from every crooked scheme of maintaining their power and influence?

In Da. 8:1, it is said of the Medo-Persian ram, that no beasts might stand before him, meaning, that no state or kingdom was able to resist his power.

BED, when a person is cast into it by way of punishment, is a bed of languishing, and therefore, a symbol of great tribulation, and anguish of body and mind. For to be tormented in bed, where men seek rest, is the highest of griefs. See Ps. 41:3, 66, Job. 33:19, Is. 28:23.

BEE. The king of Ethiopia is termed a fly, and the king of Assyria a bee, probably because in picture writing they were represented by these symbols; thus Is. 7:18,

' Jehovah shall his for the fly,
That is in the nighest part of the river of Egypt,
And for the bee that is in the land of Assyria.'

That is, the Lord shall call the Ethiopian and Assyrian kings to avenge his quarrel. The metaphor is taken from the practice of those that keep bees, who draw them out of their hives into the fields, and lead them back again by a hiss or whistle. The same figure is used in ch. 5:26.

' He will hiss every one of them from the ends of the earth,
And behold, with speed swiftly shall they come.'

See also De. 1:44, Ps. 118:12; and God calls the locusts his great army, Jo. 2:25, Ex. 23:28.

The Hebrew term for bee, daber, signifies a leader, from the admirable order with which they conduct their operations. And as the bees form a sort of body politic, having a monarch and the like, this insect may be used with propriety as the symbol of the Assyrian king. See Virgil's Georgics, b. iv, at the beginning. And compare Homer's simile, descriptive of the multitude of the Grecian forces pouring from the ships and tents, Il. ii. l. 87.

' As from some rocky cleft the shepherd sees,
Clustering in heaps on heaps, the driving bees,
Rolling and blackening, swarms succeding swarms,
With deeper murmurs and more hoarse alarms;
Dusky they spread, a close emboldened crowd,
And over the vale descends the living cloud,
So, from the tents and ships.'

Popel's Version.

Those who have studied the Septuagint know, that after Pr. 6:6, where the ant is pointed out as a pattern of foresight, that version refers also to the bee in these words:

' For as the bee, and learn what a worker she is,
And how sweetly she makes her comb:
Of whose labors both kings and subjects partake for their health.
She is loved and praised by all,
And though of a weak body, she is valued as regarding wisdom.'

Whether this passage, which is neither in the Hebrew nor Vulgate, was interpolated by some transcriber, who had a mind to add an ingenious similitude, is difficult to say. It is in all the editions of the Septuagint except the Complutensian. There are many other proverbs in the Septuagint and Vulgate, as is known to scholars, which are not in the Hebrew, and vice versa, there are some in the Hebrew that are not in the Septuagint.

BEHIND. According to the Greek and Roman authors, as the back parts, accounted behind, follow the face as leader, so whatsoever is said to be behind, is accounted as future, coming after, and not as past.

Thus in Artemidorus, b. ii. c. 51, the back signifies the old age or future time of the party. And the red color on the back of the dragon, in Homer, Il. ii. v. 308, denoted the event there signified to be future.

So in Homer's Iliad, b. iii. v. 109, ' to see things at once before and behind,' is explained by the scholiast of seeing things present and future. And so in Virgil, En. b. viii. v. 657, a ter, behind, signifies an event to come, as Servius has observed upon the place.

The reason of this symbolical signification of the word behind, may be perhaps more clearly given thus:—What is past is known, and therefore as present or before. But an event to come is unknown, unseen, and therefore behind—and to follow after, in order to be brought into actual existence. See Lc. 25:51.

Behind, when not taken symbolically, signifies what is past; as in Phil. 3:14.

BELLY is considered as the seat of the carnal affections, according to the notions of the ancients, as being that which partakes first of sensual pleasures.

Therefore the Egyptians, in the embalming of a man, threw that part of the body into the river, as the cause of all his sins, that it might, as it were, take them away with it. See Porphyry de Ab-tin, b. iv. § 10.

The oenoecrities understand the symbol of belly, concerning the family and riches of a man. Ch. 79, 149, 113, 137.

But Artemidorus, speaking of that part of the human frame, observes, that if it bears any thing, it portends diseases and want. L. i. c. 45.

The inbiting of the belly signifies all the train of afflictions which may come upon a man, as in Jers. 4:19; 9:15. And the same is fully evident from the bitter waters of jealousy, Nu. 18:27.

BIND. To bind is to forbid, or to restrain from acting, or to loose is to permit. See LZizeth's Hor. Heb. on Mat. 16:5 and the scholiast upon Homer's Head, E. v. 385, 386, 387, where the binding of Mars with a strong chain is explained of putting an end to war. See Mat. 16:19, 18:18. Compare Jn. 20:23.

BIRDS. Birds of prey signify armies who come to prey upon a country. See Jers. 12:9.

' As the ravious bird Teba hath my heritage been to me;
O ye ravenous birds, come ye against her round about;
Assemble, all ye beasts of the field,
Come ye to devour.'

And see Blayney's note on the passage Ez. 32:4, 33:17, which East Ezekiel seems to have imitated from 1:34; and see Re. 19:17, 18, where we find Ezekiel's animated address to the birds of prey, and even some of his pressions.

The reason of the metaphor is plain. As birds of prey feed upon carcasses, so those that take the goods of other men, eat as it were their flesh; which, in the symbolical language, always signifies riches or substance, as may be seen under the word FLESH.

BITTER. Bitterness, in Ex. 1:14. Bu. 1:20, Jer. 9:15, is the symbol of affliction, misery, and servitude. And, therefore, the servitude of the Israelites in Egypt, was typically represented in the celebration of the passover by bitter herbs.

Am. 8:10,

' And I will make it as a mourning for an only son,
And the end thereof as a day of bitterness.'

So Tibullus, b. ii. 4, 11,

' Non enim amara dies, et noctis amarior umbras est.'

Hn. 1:6,

' For behold, I will raise up the Chaldeans,
That bitter and swift nation.'

Schultens observes, that the root mer in Arabic is usually applied to strength and courage.

Re. 8:11. The 'bitterness of the waters,' is referred to the invasion of Genseric, king of the Vandals, who bitterly afflicted the Romans in the year 455, who also espoused the doctrines of Arius, and during his whole reign cruelly persecuted the orthodox Christians.

At. 8:23, ' The gall of bitterness'; i. e., every wickedness, a state highly offensive to God, and hurtful to others.

He. 13:15, ' A root of bitterness,'—a wicked or scandalous person, or any dangerous sin leading to apostasy.

Aristotle applies the term bitter to disposition, in his Ethics, iv. c. 5. ' Men of a bitter disposition are hardly pliable, and retain their anger a long time.'

BLACK. Black, in ancient prophecy, is the symbol of affliction, disaster, and anguish.

It is the color of approaching death, or of the terror which the foresight of it causes. See Virgil, En. b. 9, v. 619, ' stramineum timorem.' It is used, in particular, of affliction occasioned by famine. Thus Lc. 5:10, ' Our skin was black like an oven, because of the terrible famine.' See Jb. 30:50, ' My skin is black upon me, and my bones are burnt with heat.'

And Jers. 14:2,

' Because of the drought Judah mourneth,
And the gates thereof languish.'

' They are in deep mourning (lit. black) for the land,
And the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.'

See Blayney's note, Ma. 3:14, ' and that we have walked mournfully (lit. in black), meaning that they had fasted in sackcloth and ashes. Black occurs as the symbol of fear, in Jo. 2:6,

' All faces shall gather blackness.'

Jerome thus explains the passage: ' Through the greatness of their fear, their faces shall be turned like a pot; which, being burnt with fire, makes a foul appearance by its blackness and sootiness.' Joel seems to point to that dark despair, or deep distress, which the approach of the locusts should make the countenance of every person contract.

Virgil gives the epithet of black to fear, not only in the passage quoted above, but also in Georgic iv. l. 408,

Caligant nigra formidinæ locum.

The same poet applies it also to dying persons, to whom every thing appears dark. Thus Camilla to her sister Arca, when dying, Aen. xii. line 823, Tenebris nigrescunt omnia circum.

The same expression which Joel uses, is found in Na. 2:10, to denote the extremity of sorrow and pain. Thus:—

*The knees smite together,
And there is great pain in all bones,
And the faces of them all gather blackness.*

Zeh. 6:26. Here four chariots, drawn by horses of different colors, represent the four great empires of the world in succession, the Assyrian or Babylonian, the Persian, Grecian, and Roman, distinguishable both by their order and attributes. The black horses seem to denote the Persian empire, which, by subduing the Chaldeans, and being about to inflict a second heavy chastisement on Babylon, quieted God's spirit with respect to Chaldea, a country always spoken of as lying to the north of the Jews. See Blayney and Newcome.

Re. 6:5. ‘I beheld, and lo, a black horse; and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand.’

This figure of a person, and the balances to weigh corn and the other necessities of life, signified great want and scarcity, and threatened the world with famine, the next judgment of God to the sword. Thus famine is expressed by the prophet Ezekiel, ch. 4:16, 17. (See BALANCE.)

Re. 6:12. ‘The sun became black as sack-cloth of hair.’

One of the figures employed to describe, as some think, the state of the church during the last and most severe of the persecutions under the heathen Roman empire. Great public calamities are often thus figuratively described by earthquakes, eclipses, and the like, as if the order of nature were inverted.

Ez. 32:7,

*‘And I will cover the heavens when I pluck thee,
And I will clothe the stars thereof with black.
I will cover the sun with a cloud,
And the moon shall not give her light.*

*8. All the shining lights of the heavens I will clothe with black over thee,
And will set darkness upon thy land,
Saith the Lord Jehovah.’*

It is well known that the destruction of kingdoms is denoted by the strong figurative language used in this and the foregoing verse. See Bp. Howth on Ls. 13:10.

BLOOD. The symbol of slaughter and mortality. Thus Is. 3:13;

*‘And their slain shall be cast out,
And from their carcasses their stink shall ascend,
And the mountains shall melt down with their blood.’*

Ez. 14:13,

*‘If I end a pestilence upon that land,
And pour out my fury upon it in blood,
To cut off from it man and beast.’*

Blood, says Gratian, denotes every kind of immature death.

Ez. 39:17,

*‘Ye shall eat flesh and drink blood,
The flesh of men, mighty shall ye eat,
And the fat of the earth of the earth shall ye drink,
Of rams, and bulls, and of goats,
Of bulls, all of them bullocks of Bashan,
And ye shall eat fat till ye be full,
And ye shall drink blood till ye be drunken,
Of my sacrifice which I make for you.’*

This bold imagery (says Newcome) is founded on the custom of invitations to feasts after sacrifices. Ezekiel seems to have imitated and amplified Is. 34: above quoted. Kings, princes, and tyrants, are naturally expressed by rams, bulls, and he-goats.

Re. 14:19. And the wine-press was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the wine-press, even to the horses' bridles, by the space of 1600 furlongs.

The great quantity of blood mentioned in the vision is a strong image representing some great slaughter of the enemies of God and of true religion; but what particular judgment this prophecy describes is not well agreed by interpreters.

See also Re. 19:17, 18, where the sublime author has taken his images from Ezekiel rather than from Isaiah.

Blood is sometimes put for sanguinary purposes, as in Is. 33:15, ‘that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood;’ more properly, who stoppeth his ears to the proposal of bloodshed.

Ge. 49:11, ‘He washed his clothes in the blood of grapes.’

Here the figure is easily understood. Any thing of a red color may be compared to blood, as in De. 32:14, and Sirach 50:17; and agrees well with what Andromedes wrote to Alexander the Great (Phny. 14, c. 5). ‘O king, when about to drink wine, remember that you are imbuing the blood of the earth.’

Ch. 11:10, ‘Shall I drink the blood of these men?’ i. e. Shall I drink the water which these men have fetched for me at the hazard of their lives? And he poured it out in honor of Jehovah: thereby, as Parkhurst observes, acknowledging himself unworthy for whom men should lay down their lives, but that these were to be given up for Jehovah only. Is this the idea (adds he) of our warlike Christian kings?

Blood is also the symbol of atonement, Mat. 25:28, He. 13:20. The object of the effusion of blood in sacrifices was the expiation of sin. This we are taught by Moses in Le. 17:11: ‘For the life of the flesh is in the blood, and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls; for it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul.’ And the apostle says expressly, He. 9:22, ‘And almost all things are by the law purged with blood, and without shedding of blood is no remission (of sins).’ Compare Ex. 29:36, Le. 6:26, 2 Ch. 29:24. Hence also the Jews had this proverb, Genuar. Jonn. fol. 5, ‘There is no expiation except by blood.’ An expere d la boem. That the Gentiles themselves believed this, appears from Virgil's words, Aen. vi. 2.

*Sanguine placita ventos, et virginis cessa,

Sanguine quareundis redditis animo e lituadom.

With blood, O Greeks, and with a virgin skin, when bound for Troy, you soothed the winds and main, With blood must you procure a calm return, And a Greek victim in oblation burn.’

Theobald's Version.

By the blood of the Lamb of God, the faithful are not only consecrated to his service as a peculiar people, but are also cleansed from their sins. See Re. 15:6, ‘who loved us and washed us from our sins by his blood, and hath constituted us kings and priests to God, even his Father.’ This mystery is also set forth in He. 9:13, 14, ‘If the blood of bulls and goats, and the ashes of a heifer, sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works, to serve the living God?’

BOOK. A book seen in a dream, according to Artemidorus, signifies the life, i. e. the acts of him that sees it.

According to the Indian interpreters, a book is the symbol of power and dignity.

The Jewish kings, at the time they were crowned, had the book of the law of God put into their hands. See 2 K. 11:2, 2 Ch. 23:11. And thus, in allusion to this custom, to receive a book may be the symbol of the inauguration of a prince.

A book or roll folded up, in order to be laid aside, is the symbol of a law abrogated, or of a thing of no further use.

A book or roll, written within and without, or on the back side, Re. 5:1, may be a book containing long series of events; it being not the custom of the ancients to write on the back side of the roll, except when the inside would not contain all their writing. See Juvenc. Sat. i. verse 6,

‘Scriptus est in ergo, medium fuitus, Orestes.’

The ancient books were rolled on cylinders of wood or ivory, and usually the writing was only on the inside.

A book sealed is a book whose contents are secret, and have for a very long time been so, and are not to be published till the seal be removed. Horace has used this symbol, Lib. i. Ep. 20, v. 3.

To eat a book signifies to consider it carefully and digest it well in the mind. See Re. 9:9. ‘They words were found (says the prophet, Jer. 15:16) and I did eat them, and thy word was unto me joy and rejoicing of mine heart.’ Our blessed Savior uses the same metaphorical expression, when he speaks of himself as ‘the Bread of Life,’ in many passages of the sixth chapter of John's Gospel.

The substance presented to the prophets, says Secker, which had the appearance of a roll, was capable of being eaten. Perhaps it was sweet from the pleasure of being so honorably employed.

*‘Book of life?’ *Re. 3:5.

On this passage Doddridge remarks, that the book of life does not signify the catalogue of those whom God has absolutely purposed to save, but rather the catalogue of those who were to be considered as heirs of the kingdom of heaven, in consequence of their Christian profession, till, by apostasy from it, they throw themselves out of that society to which they before belonged.

Vitrinus remarks, that the expression ‘book of life’ alludes to the genealogical tables of the Jewish priests (see Ezr. 2:12, Ne. 7:64), as the white tabernacle mentioned in the same verse, i. e. in Re. 3:5, does to the priestly dress. See MacKnight's valuable note on Phil. 4:3; and Lowman on Re. 2:5.

Home, in his excellent Introduction to the Scriptures, vol. iii. p. 224, 2d ed., refers this to the military customs of the Romans. ‘The names of those who died (says he) or were cashiered for misconduct, were expunged from the muster-roll.’ To this probably Re. 3:5 alludes—‘I will not blot his name out of the book of life;’ and in this view the similitude is very striking. But in note in the same page, he allows that the allusion may be drawn from civil life. See the note itself, which is too long for transcription. The expression, ‘I will not blot his name out,’ shows that this was a probationary record, wherein men's deeds were registered, and their names kept in or blotted out, according to their deserts in the sight of God. See also Re. 22:19, where God threatens to take away a man's part out of the book of life, if that man should take away from the words of prophecy.

Another thing to be remarked is, that in Re. 13:8 and 17:8, it is called the book of life from the foundation of the world, not the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world, as is generally asserted. From this it would appear, as if God had recorded in a book at the time of the creation of all things, the names of all the men who should ever live in the world; and when the time of their actual existence came, there were set down over against their names the deeds by which they either glorified or dishonored God; and their names are spoken of as being retained in the book or blotted out of it, according to this procedure. Hence it is said of the general assembly and church of the first-born, that they are written in heaven, He. 12:23; and our Lord says to his apostles (Lu. 10:20), ‘Rejoice rather, because your names are written in heaven.’ All these things are figurative, but, like all figures, they have their meaning. Let no one conceive, because we call them figurative, that we do away with their significance; we only mean that they are not to be understood literally. What they actually import is a matter for the solemn consideration of every private Christian.

When Paul speaks of his fellow laborers, whose names are in the book of life (Phil. 4:3), it may be said, How did he know that? The words can express no more than his charitable belief, that being faithful laborers, they would be rewarded with eternal life.

When Moses says (Ex. 32:32), ‘Blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written,’ to understand the expression, we must advert to the context. God had said, that if Moses would let Ham alone, he would destroy Israel for their idolatry, and make of him a great nation. But Moses, like a true patriot and intercessor, desires that God would spare the people and destroy him. The written book is merely a metaphorical expression, referring to the records kept in the courts of justice, where the deeds of criminals are registered, and signifies no more than the purpose of God in reference to future events; so that to be cut off by an unjust death, is to be blotted out of this book. Had Moses offered to forfeit eternal life for his brethren, he would only have offended God; nor would any man be justified in making such a proposal.

The similarity of Paul's case (Ro. 9:3) leads us to introduce it in connection with this subject, though it has strictly no relation to the symbol under consideration. It would imply a contradiction, that any saint could wish himself to be accursed from Christ, which in other words would be to say, that a man who loved Christ was willing to become his enemy; nor can any man be separated from Christ, unless Paul was not.

The words have suffered from mistranslation. They should be read thus: ‘That I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart (though I myself was once willing to have been separated from Christ), for my brethren, my kinsmen,’ &c., meaning while he was a persecutor.

The ‘book of remembrance,’ mentioned Mat. 3:16, seems to be an allusion to the records kept by Eastern kings, of the good deeds done by their subjects. See Re. 6:1.

The books were opened, Re. 20:12; an allusion to the methods of human courts of justice. See Lowman's note on the passage.

BOW is the symbol of joy for the conquest of enemies. Oneire, c. 249. In Ps. 7:12, it implies victory; signifying judgments laid up in store against opposers.

To the Moguls the bow was the symbol of a kingdom; and the golden bow the badge of royalty. (Herbelot, tit. Buzuk.)

An army in battle array was represented by the Egyptians by the hands of a man; the one hand holding a shield, and the other a bow. (Hor. Apoll. Hierogl. I. ii. 5.)

It is probable, as Bishop Lowth has observed, that the term keshet, the bow, in 2 S. 1:18, is used as the title of the following elegy, so named either in memory of the destructive effect of the enemies' bows (see 1 S. 31:3), or from the bow of Jonathan peculiarly mentioned in the elegy itself, verse 22.

Bow is sometimes used to denote lying and falsehood. See Ps. 64:4. Ps. 120:4. Jer. 9:3.

It also signifies any kind of armor. The hand and the spear are most frequently mentioned, because the ancients used these most; Ps. 44:7. Ps. 46:10. Zch. 10:4. Jos. 24:12.

"The nations that draw the bow." Is. 66:19.

Bishop Lowth justly suspects a corruption of the text here. The Hebrew term for bow, keshet, is omitted in one MS., and the Septuagint takes no notice of it. The reading would then be,—

"To Tarshish, Pui, Lud, and Meshek, Tubal and Javan, the far distant coasts;"

by Meshek, meaning the Mosebi, or Muscovites, situated between the Euxine and Caspian seas.

Jer. 49:35,

"I will break the bow of Elam;

The principal part of their strength."

Isaiah, 22:6, says, "And Elam bare the quiver." Strabo also says, that the mountainous part of Elymus bred chiefly archers.

Ho. 7:16, "A deceitful bow." See the same expression in Ps. 77:57.

Virgil has, "Perfidus ensis frangitur."

Ha. 3:9, "Thy bow was made bare," i. e. drawn out of its case. The Oriental bows were wont to be carried in a case hung to the girdle.

Re. 6:2, "And behold a white horse, and he that sat on him had a bow," &c.; a figurative representation of the success and triumph of the Christian religion.

The blessing of Jacob on his son Joseph contains a passage, which may be properly adverted to, under this article. Ge. 49:23,

"Though skilful archers, slewed him,
Cocked with him, and hasted him,
Yea, his bow retained his force, and his arms thir strength,
Through the power of the mighty God of Jacob,
Through the name of the Shepherd, the Rock of Israel,
Through the God of his father, who assisted him,
Through the Omnipotent, who blessed him."

Skillful archers, lit. masters of arrows. He alludes no doubt to the insidious and persevering hatred of Joseph's brethren. See Geddes's version and note.

BRANCH. As trees denote great men and princes, so boughs, branches, sprouts, or plants, denote their offspring.

In conformity to which way of speaking, Christ, in Is. 11:1, in respect of his human nature, is styled a rod from the stem of Jesse, and a branch out of his roots, that is, a prince arising from the family of David.—See further on.

In the dream of Clytemnestra, in Sophocles' Electra, v. iv. 18, &c., from the sceptre of Agamemnon, fixed by himself in the ground, a sprout arising, spreading and overshadowing all his kingdom, denoted that a young prince of his blood should arise, and dispossessing the tyrant Ægisthus of his government, should be settled in the kingdom, to govern and protect it.

To the same purpose is the dream of Naserreddin Sebekteghin, cited by Herbelot, that a tree grew and increased insensibly out of his heart in the middle of his chamber, which stretched out its branches all over the room, and, going out at the windows, did cover the whole house; all which is explained of his son's conquering the greatest part of Asia.

So in Cassiodorus Var. b. viii. Ep. 5, Baltheum Germanus is a young prince of the Balthean race.

In Homer, ὁρος Ἀπόνος, a bough of Mars for a son of Mars, often occurs, as in his catalogue of ships, II. ii. v. 47, 170, 211, 252, 349. And the like kind of expression is used in Pindar, Olymp. 2 and 6, and other Greek authors.

And an even in our English tongue, the word Imp, which is originally Saxon, and denotes a plant, is used to the same purposes, particularly by Fox, the martyrologist, who calls King Edward VI. an imp of great hope; and by Thomas Cromwell, earl of Essex, in his dying speech, who has the same expression concerning the same prince.

That branch is the symbol of kings descended from royal ancestors, as branches from the root, see Ez. 17:3, explained by verse 12; Dan. 11:7. As the symbol of posterity simply, see Jb. 7:16.

A symbol of the Messiah. Is. 11:1,

"But there shall spring forth a rod from the trunk of Jesse, And a branch shall grow out of his roots."

The prophet, as Lowth observes, having described the destruction of the Assyrian army, under the image of a mighty forest, represents, by way of contrast, the great person who makes the subject of this chapter, as a slender twig, shooting out from the trunk of an old tree — cut down — lopped to the very root, and decayed, which tender plant, so weak in appearance, should nevertheless become fruitful and prosper. The aged trunk, denoting the royal house of David, at that time in a forlorn and contemptible condition, like a tree, of which nothing was left but a stump under ground.

Ez. 32:5,

"Behold the days are coming, saith Jehovah,
That I will raise up unto David a righteous branch,
And a king shall reign and act wisely,
And shall execute judgment and justice in the land."

From the Babylonian captivity to the coming of Christ, David was without a successor of his family, sitting upon the throne of Judah or Israel, in any sense whatever. And from the destruction of Jerusalem to the present time, the Jews have had neither a king nor a regular priesthood belonging to their nation. So that hitherto there has been a failure and interruption, both in the royal line of David, and in the sacerdotal one of Levi; both having merged in the kingdom of Christ, the son of David, which has been established over the true Israel of God, i. e. over all believers, whether Jews or Gentiles. Viewed in any other light, the prophecy must be considered to have failed of its accomplishment, or else an unusually long period has intervened, previous to its being fulfilled. Even admitting the possibility of the restoration of the families of David and Levi to their former privileges at some remote period still future, a long chasm would remain, during which no king or priest could be said to have presided, unless the supreme authority of the Messiah be allowed to have superseded all other.

The concluding clause of this verse is well paralleled by Is. 32:1. See also Is. 4:1, and compare ch. 45:8, where the same great event is set forth in similar images. See also Ps. 85:10-14, and Ps. 132:17. Lu. 1:69. Ro. 15:12. 2 Th. 2:8, as compared with Is. 11:10.

Zch. 3:8,

"For behold, I will bring forth my servant the Branch."

This cannot mean Zerubbabel, though he was a descendant from David, for the terms here and elsewhere used are too magnificent to be applied to a person of his limited authority and influence. Besides, he was already "brought forth," whereas this passage points to some future personage, and that can be no other than the great Messiah, under whom the reign of peace and righteousness was to commence and to continue. The Hebrew term employed here is tzemeh, whereas in Isaiah it is netzer; the latter meaning a plant springing from the old root, and reserved when the tree is cut down — the former, a sprout, branch, or shoot.

Zch. 6:12,

"Behold the man, The Branch is his name,
And he shall branch out from his place,
And he shall build the temple of Jehovah,
And he shall receive glory,
And shall sit and rule upon his throne,
And shall also be a priest upon his throne,
And the counsel of peace shall be between these two."

Here, again, the terms are too high for either Zerubbabel or Joshua, though something of a primary application to them may be admitted, yet the plenary fulfilment must be looked for in a greater than these.

It is well observed by Blayney, that this passage, strictly and literally translated, will not answer to any other but the Messiah, who was at once both king and priest, and, by uniting both characters in Himself, was completely qualified to bring about the counsel of peace or reconciliation between God and man.

Branch is the symbol of idolatrous worship.

Ez. 8:17, "And lo, they put the branch to their nose;" (Heb. Zemer.)

The carrying of branches, in the superstition of the Gentiles, and the custom of the Jews, was a sign of honor. And this it is that God complains of; they carried branches as if they did Him honor, but they held them to their noses like mockers; that is, they mocked Him secretly, when they worshipped Him publicly; they came with fair pretences and foul hearts; their ceremony was religious all over, but their lives were not answerable. Taylor's Worthy Communicant, ch. 5, sect. 3. See 70. Theodotion and Symmachus, as there cited.

Newcome renders it, "And lo, they send forth a scornful noise through their nostrils." This, he says, is the rendering of Aquila, Symmachus, and of some copies of the Septuagint. The Septuagint has it thus:—

"And lo, they are as it were insulting me to my face."

But, in favor of the common version, Dathe says, that a late writer on the religion of Persia enumerates among the sacred furniture a bundle of twigs, called Barson in the old Persian language, which they hold in their hands while praying. Michaelis says, that they held it before their face opposite to the holy fire; and that it is represented in D'Anquetil's Voyages, tab. 3. Spenser observes, that the heathens, in the worship of their deities, held forth the branches of those trees which were dedicated to them. See Soph. OED. Tyr. line 2, 3, &c.

"Wherefore sit you here,

And supplant them, with sacred boughs adorned,

Crown to our altars?"

on which Professor Franklin has the following note:—"When prayers and supplications were to be made, either in the temples or other places, the petitioners carried boughs in their hands, bound round with fillets of white wool; this was always looked on as a mark of distress, which entitled them to a peculiar regard, rendered their persons sacred, and protected them from all violence. It is not improbable, but that this custom among the Greeks was borrowed from the Jews, whom we find carrying houghs on solemn festivals." See Maccab. ch. 13.

But as there seems no distress in the case mentioned in the text, but rather provocation and impiety, the rendering of Abp. Newcome appears preferable.

The Vulgate version is, "They apply the branch to their nostrils," which the translator Jerome explains by "branch of the palm-tree with which they adorned the idols." The text (says Parkhurst on Zemer) seems plainly to allude to the Magian fire-worshippers, who, Strabo tells us, L. 15, when they were praying before the sacred fire, held a little branch of twigs in their hand. See more in the same place. And Horne's Introd. v. iii. p. 385, ed. 2.

In Is. 14:19, "An abominable branch" means a tree which a malefactor has been hanged on, for such were held in detestation. See Lowth in loc.

In Ez. 17:4, Jehuiahina is called the highest branch of a cedar, as being king.

Olive branches, Zch. 4:12. See under OLIVE.

Branch of the vine, Jn. 15:2. "Like the withered branches which are gathered for fuel and burnt."

Branches are symbols of prosperity or calamity. "Ramus creberrimus" (says Glassius, p. 809) multisque vocitis synonymis, usurpat in allegoriis, quibus prosperitas imagine crescentis, virientes, vigintique arboris proponit; et vice versa infelicitas ac calamitas imagine arboris marescentes." Ge. 49:22. Jb. 15:32-39; 19. Ps. 80:11, 12. Is. 25:5. Ez. 17:5. Ma. 4:1, &c.

BRASS. The symbol of insensibility, hardness, and presumption or obstinacy in sin. See Is. 4:1,

"Because I knew that thou wert obstinate,
That thy neck was a sinew of iron,
And that thy brow was brass."

Jer. 6:28,

"They are brass and iron, all of them; Instruments of adulteration are they."

Brass and iron are the harder metals used to adulterate the pure silver.

Ez. 22:18,
"They are all brass and tin, and iron and lead,
In the midst of the furnace,
They are even the dross of silver."

Kingdom of brass. It is by this epithet that the Macedonian empire is described, in Da. 2:39, in allusion to its warlike nature — the arms in these times being generally made of brass.

Mountains of brass. Zch. 6:1. It is difficult to say what these mean, unless we interpret them, as Vitringa does, of those firm and immutable decrees by which God governs the world. The Psalmist has an expression resembling it, in Ps. 36:16, "They righteousness is like the great mountains."

Brass is also the symbol of strength. See Ps. 107:16. Is. 65:4.

Mi. 4:13,

"Thine horn will I make iron,
And thine hoofs will I make brass;"

i. e. to overcome all enemies, and tread them down, as an ox the corn in threshing, whose hoofs are shod with iron or brass. De. 25:4. Ho. 10:11.

So in Jer. 1:18, and 15:20, brass boughs signify a strong and lasting adversary or opposer.

De. 28:23, "The heaven over thy head shall be brass," &c.; i. e. rain shall be withheld, and the earth shall be barren.

Is. 45:2, "I will break in pieces the gates of Babylon," &c.; i. e. the brazen gates of the wall of Babylon, of which there were a hundred. See Herod. b. i. 179, 180.

Fine brass, or aurichaleum, Re. 1:15-2:18.

See Parkhurst's Greek Lexicon, on χαλκοτ-

BREAST. Breast is, by the Oneirocritics, explained of prudence. So the Indian, c. 76, and the Persian and the Egyptian interpreters, make it the symbol of long life, riches, and victory, which are the effects and marks of wisdom.

The Greeks seem to have had the notion, that the breast was the seat of wisdom; for φόρος, wise, with them came from φορεῖς, which are the precordia, the parts of the breast about the heart; whence Juvenal, speaking of a dull youth, says, Sat. 7, v. 160, "quod levata in parte mamillae nil salit Arcadicus Juvenal."

Nu. 27,

"And her handmaids are carried away as with the voice of dove, Smiling (or tabering) upon their breasts."

As the tabret is beaten with the fingers, and those fingers are applied to a skin stretched over a hollow hoop, the description gives great life to the words of the prophet Nahum, who compares women beating on their breasts, in deep anguish, to their playing on a tabret. Harmer, I, 482.

Le. 7:30. "That the breast may be waved for a wave-offering before Jehovah."

The offerer's waving of the breast of the sacrifice to God, was typically giving up to Him the heart and affections; and this being afterwards allotted to the priest, reminded the believer that He only whom the priest represented, did ever, in his own person, make an entire and continual surrender of his heart and will to God. See Parkhurst on here.

BREASTPLATE. Breastplates are defensive arms, denoting and giving courage and undauntedness to those that use them; and, by reflection, striking terror and amazement into those they are employed against. Accordingly, to dream of finding or putting on a breastplate, is, with the Oneirocritics, c. 153, the symbol of joy for the destruction of enemies, &c.; 249, the symbol of riches to be obtained by valor.

The military cuirass or breastplate was made with rows or scales of metal placed on each other, for the better defence of the warrior. Homer has described one of these breastplates, as used by the Greeks at the Trojan war. Il. 11, l. 24, 25.

* Her rows of azure steel the work infolds

Twice ten of iron, and twelve of ductile gold.^{Pop.}

In another place, Il. 13, l. 439, he calls a breastplate a rest of brass; and Virgil thus describes the armor of Turnus, En. 11, l. 487,

"Clad in a cuirass rough with brazen scales."

The breastplate of the Jewish high-priest is particularly described in Le. 28:15, 39:8, &c. It contained the Urim and Thummim, Lights and Perfections; for an explanation of which, see Park. Heb. on or.

Israel beautifully characterizes the Redeemer of Israel, by saying, 59:17,

"And he put on righteousness as a breastplate,
And the helmet of salvation was on his head;
And he put on the garments of vengeance for his clothing,
And he clad himself with zeal, as with a mantle."

The language of Israel is in some measure copied by Paul in Ep. 6:14,17, where the same terms are figuratively employed to point out the spiritual arm of true believers.

In 1 Th. 5:8, the language is altered, from the breastplate of righteousness, to the breastplate of faith and love. On both of which passages see Chandler.

In Re. 9:9, the mystical locusts are said to have "breast-plates, as it were breastplates of iron," which agrees very well with the condition of the natural locust, which has about its body a pretty hard shell, of the color of iron: "Arimav natura entem," says Clandian.

And in verse 17 of the same chapter, the horsemen are described as having breastplates of fire, and of jacinth, or hyacinth, and brimstone, &c., of red, blue, and yellow colors, denoting the terror of their appearance, when marching to war; probably referring to the Saracenic invasions and conquests in 713.

BRIMSTONE. The symbol of a perpetual torment and destruction.

Thus in Jb. 18:15, "Brimstone shall be scattered upon his habitation;" i.e., his house or family shall be destroyed forever, by an inextinguishable fire.

Brim-tone, q. d. brenne stone, i. e. burning stone, was used by the heathen in their religious purification. See Juvenal and Lucian, as quoted by Parkhurst on θεον; and God made it an instrument of his vengeance on the heathen and other delinquents. See Ps. 11:6, De. 29:23, and Ju. 7.

Israh, speaking of the enemies of the church, under the designation of Edom, and their destruction, 31:9, says,

"And her towers shall be turned into pitch,
And her dust into sulphur;

"And her whole land shall become burning pitch."

And respecting Tophet, 30:33, his language is,

* For Tophet is ordained of old,

Even the same for the long is prepared:

He hath made it deep; he hath made it large;

SYMBOL DICT.

A very pyre, and abundance of fuel,
And the breath of Jehovah, like a stream of brimstone, shall kindle it."

Re. 9:17. See under BREASTPLATE.

See also Re. 1:10, 20:10, 21:8; in all which places there seems to be an allusion to the manner in which God destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah.

BUILD. In the Oneirocritics, (Achmet's Coll. c. 115,) any kind of building implies settlement of a family, or acquisition of some new honor, kingdom, or power, and its peaceful enjoyment according to the subject; and, by consequence, a formal change of state.

And thus, in several places of Holy Scripture, the building of a city is in order to a quiet settlement.

The first that is said to have built a city is Cain, Ge. 4:17. This undoubtedly he did to comfort himself, and thus to take off the odium of being a vagabond, which God had inflicted on him. So that the said city he designed to be a full settlement, and he therefore called it Enoch, which signifies Dedication, or the beginning of a settlement; a dedication requiring a quiet possession and enjoyment for some time, as in De. 20:5. The manner of dedicating a house or city, was probably wont to be done with the solemnity of feasting, prayer, and singing of Psalms. See Ne. 12:27, Ps. 30; title.

The same may be said of the building of Babel; which was designed for a settlement, contrary to the command of God, as Josephus hints, who willed that mankind should then spread themselves by colonies. But, however, the building of that was pretended to be a settlement: — Let us build us a city and tower, whose top may reach to heaven; and let us make us a name, lest we be scattered over the face of the whole earth! Ge. 11:4.

But further, that the building of a city is in order to a quiet settlement, is evident from the Psalmist, — They wandered in the wilderness in a solitary way, and found no city to dwell in, Ps. 107:4; and verse 7, "He led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation," or settlement; mousheb, from ishah, which signifies not only to sit, but to stay, remain, persevere, or abide, as in Mi. 5:4. So also in 2 Ch. 4:6,7; it is said, "And he built fenced cities in Judah; for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years, because the Lord had given him rest. Therefore he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, — And he gave them rest on every side." All which imports that the building of a city is in order to settle in peace.

The same notion appears also in these verses of Virgil, En. 1, v. 251, &c.

"Hic tamen illa urbem," &c.

"At length he founded Palni's happy seat,
And gave his Trojans a secure retreat;
Here fixed their abode, and there renewed their name,
And there in quiet rules, and crowned with fame.
But we, descended from your sacred line,
Entitled to your heaven, and rites divine,
Are banished earth, and for the wrath of one,
Removed from Latium, and the promised throne,"

Dryden.

So also in AEn. b. 8, v. 46 :

"Hic locus urbē erit," &c.

"This is thy happy home, the clime where fate Ordains thee to restore the Trojan state."

To build or make a house, is sometimes a Hebrewism, meaning to prosper a family. Thus, Ex. 1:21, "And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that he prospered their own families."

Jn. 4:11, "Who did build the house of Israel?" i.e., who increased his family by a numerous progeny.

Psal. 89:4, "I will build up thy throne to all generations;" i.e., I will perpetuate thy kingdom to thy posterity.

Is. 61:4,

"And they that spring from thee shall build up the ruins of old times;

"They shall repair the ancient desolations;

"They shall repair the cities laid waste,

"The desolations of continual ages."

The Gentiles, so long a moral wilderness, shall be brought into the knowledge and service of the true God, like an ancient city rising from its ruins.

BULL is sometimes used in Scripture metaphorically to represent violent and furious enemies. Thus, Ps. 22:12,

"Many bulls have compassed me,

"Strong bulls of Bashan have beat me round."

The Chaldee has it, "people like pushing bulls."

The high priests, scribes, Herod, Pilate, set against Christ.

Ezekiel uses the same phrase to point out the princes of the earth, 32:18, where see Newcome.

Ps. 68:30, "the multitude of the bulls," &c.

Durrell has an ingenious conjecture on this verse. He renders it thus:

"Rebuke the beast of the herd,

"The congregation of bulls with the calves;"

The people of the sea, who humble themselves before fragments of silver; Scatter the people who delight in war."

* By the beast of the reed (says he) is clearly meant the hippopotamus, which denotes the Egyptians. "The company of bulls and calves is a plain allusion to their Apis and Serapis, or Isis and Osiris, which they worshipped, and to which the third hemistich refers, calling these idols contemptuously "fragments of silver," because overlaid or plated with that metal.

* They are called "the people of the sea." Isaiah describes their country (11:15) by the tongue of the Egyptian sea, and by the seven streams.

* They are called "a people that delight in war," where the Psalmist concludes, as he had begun, by requesting God to repress their fury?

Jer. 50:26, "Open her fattening stalls," &c.; ver. 27, "Stay all her bullocks," &c. Fattening stalls mean the cities of Babylon, and her bullocks the inhabitants, who were pampered like beasts fattened for the slaughter.

The ancient heathen used to sacrifice bulls to Jupiter: thus Ovid, Metam. lib. 4, line 756,

"Taurus tibi summe Deorum."

Compare Virgil, AEn. 9, l. 627.

BURIAL is an honor paid to the dead.

The want of it was always looked upon as a circumstance of the greatest misery, Ps. 79:1, 2, 3. Ec. 6:3. Potter's Arch. Graeca, b. 2, 1, 4, c. 1; and the denial of it, as an act of the greatest punishment, Arch. Graeca, v. ii. p. 165.

But the oneirocritics consider burial in another view, — as the consumption of all.

And therefore, not to be buried, in visions that portend bad, is bad; and in such as portend bad, good.

And, therefore, in relation to such visions as portend bad, the Indian Interpreter, in ch. 130, says, "That if any one dream that he is buried, his burial denotes that his utter ruin is certain. But if he dreams that any of the things which belong to his burial are wanting, that deficiency portends good hopes of safety."

Dead men in the grave are apt to be forgotten, Ps. 31:12, Ps. 88:5. And therefore, in Ps. 88:11,12, the grave is synonymous to the land of forgetfulness; and in Ps. 34:17, Ps. 115:17, 1 S. 2:9, silence is put for the grave.

And in Ovid, Metam. b. 5, v. 356, Silentes, or men in silence, are dead men.

Hence, not to suffer a person to be put into the grave, denotes that he shall be remembered, and not be suffered to be put into eternal silence; the grave, in profane authors, being called an everlasting house. Soph. Antig. I. 250, Cie. Tusc. Quest. 1, in fin.

On the contrary, the notion of the word sepulchra, monument, is opposed to the aforesaid notion of a grave as place of silence, and land of forgetfulness. For men, considering the grave to be such a place, have endeavored to alter its property, by erecting monuments, which should record their names and actions to posterity.

And, in this sense, not to suffer a person to be put into a monument, denotes that means will be used in order to obliterate his memory, to the end that his actions may never be imitated, nor his cause revived.

So the word sepulchrum (sepulchrum), in Horace, Epod. 9, v. 26, is to be taken, "Virtus sepulchrum condit," his valor hath raised him a monument, i.e., hath eternized his memory — hath gotten him perpetual renown.

And, therefore, to dream of having or building a tomb or sepulchre, is, according to Artemidorus, b. 2, "a dream that portends good both to rich and poor; to a slave, that he shall obtain his freedom, — to a childless person, that he shall have an heir, — to a poor man, that he shall get an estate, — and to an unmarried person, a sign of marriage."

Jer. 22:19, "With the burial of an ass shall he be buried."

Jehoiakim, being surprised in an ambuscade, and not slain, but made prisoner, 2 K. 24:22, was carried to the king of Babylon, who detained him in close custody till he could conveniently send him to Babylon. But his design being frustrated by his previous death, which happened soon after his confinement, Nebuchadnezzar, at once to testify his indignation against him, and perhaps to intimidate his successor from exasperating him by a long resistance, ordered his dead body to be ignominiously cast forth without burial before the walls of Jerusalem, as is foretold both in this passage and in 36:30.

BURN. The burning of heaps of armor was used by the Romans as an emblem of peace. Isaiah has the same image, 9:4,

"For the graves of the armed warrior in the conflict,
And the garment rolled in much blood,
Shall be for a burning, even fuel for the fire."

The Psalmist employs this image to express

complete victory, and a perfect establishment of peace, Ps. 46:9,

'He hath destroyed the artillery of war to the end of the earth;

'He hath broken the bow, and snapp'd the spear short off,

'He hath burnt the carriages in the fire.'

Ezekiel, in his bold manner, has carried the image to a high degree of amplification. He describes the burning of the arms of the enemy, in consequence of the complete victory to be obtained by the Israelites over Gog and Magog, 39:8-10. The victory was to be so great, that they should suffice for fires on the mountains and in the open fields for seven years.

'Behold, it cometh to pass and shall be done, saith the Lord

'This is the day whereof I have spoken.

'And they that dwell in the cities of Israel shall go forth,

'And shall set on fire and burn the armor, the shields and

'the bucklers,

'The bows and the arrows, and the handstaves and the

'spears;

'And they shall burn them with fire seven years;

'So that they shall take no wood from the field,

'Nor cut down timber for the forests;

'For the fire shall burn the armor with fire;

'And they shall spoil those that spoiled them,

'And shall plunder those that plundered them,

'Saith the Lord Jehovah.'

'The burning bush' (Ex. 2:2) was an emblem of the condition of Israel at that time; they were then in the fire of affliction, yet, by the divine Providence, they were not consumed in it, of which this vision was a pledge.

'The spirit of burning,' Is. 4:4, according to Lowth, means the fire of God's wrath, by which he will prove and purify his people; gathering them into his furnace, in order to separate the dross from the silver, the bad from the good. The severity of God's judgments, the fiery trial of his servants, Ezekiel (22:18-22) has set forth at large, after his manner, with great boldness of imagery, and force of expression, God threatens to gather them into the midst of Jerusalem as into the furnace; to blow the fire upon them, and to melt them.

Malachi (3:2,3) treats the same subject, and shows the same events under like images:

'But who may abide the day of his coming?

'And who shall stand, when he appears?

'For He is like the fire of the refiner,

'And like the soap of the fullers,

'And He shall sit refining and purifying the silver;

'And He shall purify the sons of Levi,

'And cleanse them like gold, and like silver;

'That they may be Jehovah's ministers,

'Presenting unto Him an offering in righteousness.'

HYSS. The cotton plant, of which very fine white garments like linen were made. It grows in Palestine, in pods. It is the soft, downy substance formed in the inside of the pods of the shrub called Gossypium.

When David went to bring up the ark from the house of Obed-edom, he was clothed with a robe of hyss, 1 Ch. 15:27. The same is described as the apparel of the rich man, Lu. 16:19. The garments of the Jewish priests were made of it. Byss garments were worn also by the Egyptian priests. See Plut. de Iside; Portph. de Abstin.; Harmer's Obs. v. ii. p. 358.

Hence a white byss garment, as being the most valuable, denotes, symbolically, the highest and most perfect holiness and prosperity. Thus the church of Christ is represented, under the character of the bride, as being arrayed in fine linen, clean and white, which fine linen (it is added) is the righteousness of saints, i. e. a divine nature and disposition, ornaments more valuable than the costly habits of Eastern princes, or of ancient priests. Re. 19:8.

Theocritus mentions byss as a clothing worn by women on festive occasions, Idyll. 2, l. 73,

'Trailing a beauteous robe of byss.'

C.

CALDRON. Ez. 11:3,

'It is not near that we should build houses;

'This city is the caldron, and we are the flesh;'

i. e. the time is not near that we should build houses in a foreign land. Jer. 29:5. Here we shall die in mature age, as the choice pieces are not taken out of the caldron till they are perfectly prepared. The image is suggested by the process at the Jewish sacrifices. See I. S. 2:13,14.

In opposition to this, God says, ver. 7, that if Jerusalem is the caldron, it is the caldron of the slain; and, ver. 11, that it should not be the caldron of many, who were destined to flee and to perish in the extreme parts of their country. See 2 K. 25:6,7,21.

See the same image more expanded in 24:3,4,5, &c., where the good pieces and choice joints mean the great men of Jerusalem; the bones signify the meaner people, and the scum denotes wickedness. The burning of the bones and of the pot refers to God's judgments, not only on the inhabitants, but also on the city.

CALF. The word calf, in Scripture style, is for most part so general as to be taken for the whole species; the word beket, which is often translated by bevs, an ox, in the Seventy, being also frequently rendered by μούχος, calf.

The symbol of the ox, calf, or steer, when there is no mention made of horns, is taken in general for what is signified by the whole animal; whose prime or chief quality is labor, patience, and riches, or the great product of corn. So in the dream of Pharaoh, the seven kine denoted so many harvests; their number determining the years, which is peculiar to kine, as the Oneirocritics all allow in ch. 228, 239.

In the Proverbs of Solomon, 14:4, it is said, 'Much increase is by the strength of the ox.' So that the ox has the signification of increase with great labor; and is, therefore, in De. 23:4, the symbol of the Jewish and of the Christian priesthood. It is there said, 'Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn.' On which Paul remarks, 1 Co. 9:9, 'Doth God take care for oxen?' as if he had said, When God made this law, do you think that he had not a nobler design than that of barely showing kindness to the laboring beasts? Yes, surely, he designed that it should be applied to those who labor in the word and doctrine of his law; and who by sowing among men spiritual things, deserve at least to reap from them the benefit of worldly things in return. The same place is applied to the same purpose by the apostle in Ti. 5:18. Agreeably to the account now given, oxen, according to Artemidorus, b. 4, c. 58, are symbols of workmen and subjects, i. e. working for the good of others.

Ex. 32:4, 'Made it a molten calf, &c.'

The calf here must have been considered merely as a symbol, for the Israelites could not be so stupid as to believe, that the idol taken just before out of the furnace, had been their deliverer at any former period. The Psalmist speaks on this with due severity, Ps. 106:19,20.

'They made a calf in Horeb, and worshipped the molten image:

'Then they changed their glory (i. e. God, the proper object of their adoration) into the similitude of an ox that eateth grass.'

Jer. 34:18, 'In presence of the calf, when they cut it in twain.' So it should be rendered—In order to ratify the covenant, they killed a calf or young bullock, which they cut in two, and placing the two parts at some distance from each other, they passed between them; intending to signify by this rite, that they consented to be served in the like manner in case they violated their part of the covenant. Something of the like sort was a practice among the Greeks and Romans upon such occasions, as may be seen in Homer's Iliad, b. 3, 208, and Livy's Roman History, b. 1, c. 24, and b. 21, c. 45. Hence there will appear a peculiar force in the expression, of entering into the covenant, in presence of the calf, because the sight of that object served to remind them of the penalties they subjected themselves to, on violating their engagement. We find God conforming Himself to this usage, when He made a covenant with Abraham, Ge. 15:9,10,17,18. (Blayney.) Ho. 8:6, 'The calf of Samaria shall be broken in pieces.'

It is well known that animals of this species were worshipped in Egypt, (see Herod. b. 3, c. 2), the apis at Memphis, and the innevis at Heliopolis. As they are employed in tilling the ground, they may have been used as symbols of one who had anciently introduced or improved the art of agriculture. Males of this kind were dedicated to Osiris, and females to Isis. The Israelites may have originally borrowed this superstition from the Egyptians, and may have afterwards revived it, imputing the great fertility of Egypt to the deity thus represented.

Ho. 13:2, 'Let the men who sacrifice kiss the calves.'

See I. K. 19:18. Thus Cicero describes a statue of Hercules as having 'rictum ejus ac mentum paulo atritius, quod in precibus et gratulationibus non solum adorare, verum etiam osculari solent.' In Ver. act. 2, l. 4, § 43.

Ho. 14:2, 'So will we render the calves of our lips.' More properly, that we may render the fruit of our lips.

See Newcome in loc. and Mede, p. 289.

CANDLESTICK, OR LAMP-SCONCE, according to Artemidorus, b. 1, c. 76, signifies a wife; for which, in c. 80, he gives this reason, viz. 'That as the lamp or the light thereof signifies the master of the house, because he overlooks it, so the lamp-sconce signifies his wife, whom he rules and presides over.'

And weddings were celebrated in the Eastern countries with lamps or torches—the bridegroom and bride, the bridesmen and maidens, having each one in their hands. And the same custom was among the Greeks and Romans. See Mat. 25:1, &c.

See Homer, Il. 6, v. 492; Eurip. Pheniss. v. 346; Medea, v. 1027. See also Virgil, Eclog. 8, v. 29.

Note. In all places in the Old or New Testament, where the words candle and candlestick occur, it should be invariably lamp and lamp-stand; for candles were not used in those days in Judea for lighting their houses.

We read in the book of Ex. 25:31,32, &c., of a candlestick of gold with seven branches, which Moses made by the command of God to be put in the tabernacle. To this allusion is made in Re. 1:10, where the seven candlesticks are declared to be the symbols of the seven churches; and the seven stars to be the symbols of the angels of those churches.

This, according to the difference of circumstances, says Daubuz, which is to be always carefully considered, is exactly agreeable to the explanation, which is given of the same symbols, by such of the most ancient profane writers as were well versed in the symbolical character and language.

For with them, a candlestick or lamp-stand was the symbol of the wife of the party concerned; and stars were inferior princes, or governors ruling under a supreme.

Accordingly, the church, which is frequently represented by the symbol of a woman betrothed or married to Christ, is here, as consisting of several particular churches, represented under the symbol of seven golden candlesticks.

And as Christ is the head, the high-priest, and king of his church, therefore are the visible spiritual rulers of the church under him represented by stars.

In Re. 2:5, the angel of the church in Ephesus is exhorted to consider his ways, and threatened, if he should not, that his church or candlestick should be removed out of its place. And it is very remarkable, that at this time there is not so much as one Christian in that place which was once the famous city of Ephesus, and to which Paul wrote his Epistle.

In Re. 11:4, the two witnesses are termed 'the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth'; in allusion to Zerubbabel and Joshua, as described by Zechariah, ch. 4.

Re. 2:1, 'Walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks' (says Lowman,) is an expression taken from the office of the priests, in dressing the lamps, which was to keep them always burning before the Lord. I conceive, therefore, walking here may be designed to signify not only a care to observe and know the true state of the churches, but moreover, to assist and promote their improvement in religion, or to assist the churches in their proper character, as consecrated to the service of God, that they may shine as lights in the world, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation. Phil. 2:15.

CARCASS. Mat. 24:28, 'Wherever the carcass is, there will the eagles be gathered together.' That the carcass here is an emblem of the state of Judea, and the city of Jerusalem, at the time of their capture and desolation by the Romans, is generally acknowledged by interpreters.

The carcass, πτῶπα, a body fallen to the ground, as being deprived of life, is thrown out like that of some slain animals, unfit for use, to be preyed on by vultures, or other carrion-fowls.

The transgressions of the Jewish people had risen to such a height, as to render them offensive in the eyes of God, like a corpse full of putridity. The language of their old prophets had become awfully applicable to them. Zephaniah well described them, 3:1, &c.

'Woe to her that is rebellious and polluted, to the oppressing city;

'She hath not obeyed the voice;

'She hath not received instruction;

'In Jehovah she hath not trusted,

'To her God she hath not been near.

'Her judges are evening wolves;

'They wait not until the morning;

'Her prophets are light, they are treacherous men;

'Her priests have polluted the sanctuary; they have violated the law.'

And so in Ho. 4:1, &c.,

'Hear the word of Jehovah, O ye sons of Israel,

'For Jehovah hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land:

'For there is no truth nor mercy,

'Nor knowledge of God in the land;

'In swearing, and lying, and killing,

'And stealing, and committing adultery, bare they their froth,

'And blood reacheath unto blood.'

Compare also Is. 50:21,23. Ma. 3:5.

Josephus gives a similar testimony, as an eyewitness to the degraded condition of his countrymen. See Bell. Jud. b. 6, c. 36. 'I think that had the Romans forbore to have punished so great criminals, either the earth would have swallowed up the city, or some deluge have drowned it, or else the thunder and lightning, which consumed Sodom, would have fallen upon it; for the people of Jerusalem were far more impious than the Sodomites.'

Language resembling this is used respecting anti-Christian Babylon at a later period, Re. 18:5. "For her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities."

A carcass thus thrown out is always attended with disgrace, as being without sepulture, which, amongst the ancients, was accounted an unhappiness. Thus in Ps. 79:1, &c., "O God, the heathen are come into thine inheritance, Thy holy temple they have defiled, They have laid Jerusalem on heaps. The dead bodies of thy servants they have given to be meat to the fowls of heaven, The flesh of thy saints unto the beasts of the earth, Their blood they have shed like water round about Jerusalem, And there was none to bury them."

So Virgil, Aen. b. 6,
"Erpe mihi invicta mala, et tu mihi terram iugis."

And Valer. Flac. Argon. b. I,

"Diripiunt lacerto senos, nec membra sepulchro Cor legat."

And Virgil again, Aen. b. 10, v. 559,

"Non ut optimi mater," &c.

"Lie there, inglorious, and without a tomb, Far from thy mother, and thy native home, Exposed to savage beasts, and birds of prey, Or thrown for food to monsters of the sea." Dryden.

And, 2, Catullus in the Argonauts,

Such a carcass was Jerusalem, the public offence of God and men, at the time when it was delivered up by divine justice to the Roman vultures. And such was the scorn with which she was beheld, as to recall the language of Jeremiah, La. 2:15, 16,

"All that passed by the way have smitten their hands together at thee; They hissed and shook their head at the daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that they call perfect in beauty, the delight of the whole earth? All thine enemies have opened their mouths against thee; They hissed and gnashed the teeth; they said, We have swallowed her up;

Surely this is the day which we looked for: we have found, we have seen it."

To this carcass were gathered together the eagles, i. e. the Roman power. That eagles were the symbols of the Romans, is plain from their whole history. The Roman generals, as Codinus informs us, wore the figures of eagles interwoven with their shoes. Tarquin also carried a golden crown with an ivory sceptre, on the top of which was an eagle, the ensign of Roman power, which succeeding emperors adopted, as we learn from Dionysius, Livy, Florus, Plutarch, &c. Prudentius notices this, lib. de corona, p. 203,

"Aquila ex orbis sumit arrogatum Gestator eius."

But the eagle was principally the symbol of the Roman army. They carried it on their standards and military ensigns, either made of gold and silver, or embroidered on silk or linen. Hence Clodian says, lib. de Bell. Get.,

"Federit imbellis Aquilas servilis armis."

The Roman coins and medals still bear testimony to the use of this symbol. See Spandrinus and others.

There is great propensity in comparing the Romans to eagles. The eagle is the king of birds, as Pindar, Alcian, and others, observe. Wherefore it was the common and suitable symbol of the most potent monarchs. At the time when Jerusalem was destroyed, Rome was mistress of a great part of the world, and Palestine in particular was subjected to her sway. The Jews themselves confessed this, Jn. 19:15, "We have no king but Caesar." Titus, then, was the imperial eagle, by whom the Jewish carcass was torn. Again, the eagle was by the law of Moses an unclean bird, Le. 11:13; it belongs to the rapacious kind, which was impure, De. 14:12. So the Roman nation was held to be impure by the Jews, and with whom they could have no intercourse, as appears from Jn. 18:28, "they themselves went not into Pilate's judgment hall, lest they should be defiled." Indeed, all the Gentile nations were considered to be impure, as being addicted to idolatry, whence they were called dors, Re. 22:15.

Eagles were also the emblems of strength and swiftness; hence Saul and Jonathan are compared to them, 2 S. 1:23. And of the spoiler of Moab it is said, Jer. 48:40, "He shall fly as an eagle, and shall spread his wings over Moab." Compare Jer. 49:22, Da. 7:4, Ho. 8:1, Ez. 17:3, where the wings of eagles denote strong armies. And the Roman army is called by Daniel, 9:27, "The wing of abomination." Such was Titus, who flew with a mighty force to Jerusalem, and made it his prey.

Its capacity and partiality for carcasses is remarked by Job, 39:30,

"Her young ones suck up blood,

"And where the slain are, there is she;"

a passage on which our Lord is supposed to have had his eye, when he made use of the expression in Mat. 24:28. Such were the eagles who devastated Jerusalem, as affectionately described by Josephus, b. vi. c. 14, and elsewhere. "The houses were full of dead women and infants; and the streets were filled with the carcasses of old men; and the young men, pale like ghosts, walked about the market-place, and fell down dead where it happened. And now the multitude of dead bodies was so great, that they who were alive could not bury them, nor indeed cured they for burying them, being now uncertain what should befall them selves."

The eagle was esteemed by the heathen as the minister of supreme Jove, and was sacred to him. Hence Horace, b. 4, ode 4, "Qualem ministrum, fulminis ultrem, cui Rex Deorum regnum in aves vagas permisit."

"As the winged minister of thundering Jove,
To whom he gave his dreadful bolts to bear,
Faithful assistant of his master's love,
King of the wandering sons of the air," &c.

We see in coins the eagle holding the thunderbolt in its feet, (as in Spandrinus and others,) a fiction founded, as Pliny tells us, on the fancy that this is the only bird never destroyed by lightning; but more likely to have originated in its remarkable swiftness. And the souls of the deified or consecrated emperors were believed to be transported to heaven by this bird.

So Titus was the minister of the true God, in his expedition against the Jews, acting as his executioner to inflict vengeance on that infidel and rebellious nation, because of their rejection of the Messiah, a fact which the Roman general himself acknowledged, as Josephus informs us: "Surely God," said he, "hath assisted us in this war, and he it was that drove the Jews from these fortresses. For what could men's hands and engines prevail against them?"

King, in his Morsels of Criticism, v. i. p. 394, gives a more extended meaning to the passage in Mat. 24:1 and paraphrases it thus:—"Wherever, on the face of the whole earth, the corrupt mass of lawless, violent people, disturbing the peace and prosperity of all human society, is, there will those dreadful and angelic powers, who are to be the ministers of God's vengeance, on the great advent of our Lord, be assembled and appear."

And he considers it to be an allusion to the prediction of the prophet Ezekiel in his 39th chapter. But I do not see the force of his reasoning.

See under EAGLE.

CEDAR is the symbol of a great king. See Ez. 17:3, where Jeohachin is probably meant, and Ez. 31:3, where the top, or leader, is supposed to represent the king of Assyria, and the thick boughs his subordinate kings and rulers. His root is strikingly described in verses 12 and 13. Virgil has a similar comparison with respect to the fall of Troy:—

"Rex like a mountain ash, which dated the winds,
And stood the sturdy strokes of laboring hinds.
About the roots the cruel axe resounds;
The stumps are pierced with oft-repeated wounds.
The root in pure their upper load sustains,
But down she falls, and spreads a ruin through the plain." Ez. b. 2, 626.

Zch. 11:2, "Howl, O fir-tree, because the cedar is fallen!" Under these images, the fall of mighty men, and the subversion of the Jewish polity, are represented. Seeker.

Is. 2:13, "Even against all the cedars of Lebanon." See Lowth's excellent note on the passage.

See also Am. 2:9; Homer, Il. 13, 359; Horace, lib. 2, b. 4, 6; Virgil, Ene. 5, 147.

Is. 41:19, "In the wilderness I will give the cedar," &c., expressing the relief to be afforded to them, while fainting with heat in their journey through that hot country, destitute of shelter, by raising shade trees, and those of the tallest and most beautiful kind, to spring up for their defence. The apocryphal Baruch, speaking of the return from Babylon, expresses God's protection of his people by the same image: "Even the woods, and every sweet smelling tree, shall overshadow Israel by the commandment of God," 58.

This tree was the symbol of eternity, because its substance never decays nor rots. Hence the ark of the covenant was made of cedar; and those are said to utter things worthy of cedar, who write that which no time ought to obliterate. It is used to point out persons of eminence, or men of power, who are often called in Scripture cedars of Lebanon, and of whom Isaiah says, 2:13, "The day of the Lord shall come upon them."

CHAIN signifies hindrance from action. See Artemidorus, b. 3, c. 35. See BIRD.

It is sometimes used figuratively in a bad sense, as in Ps. 73:6, "Therefore pride compasseth them about as a chain." So Naaman, in sentiment, "Neither do you wear on your neck the purple jacinth, and the green jasper, which make fools proud." And Euripides, Electra, v. 176, "Nor am I carried away with pride on account of my golden chains."

Sometimes it is used in a good sense, as in Col. 3:14, where Paul calls "Love the bond or chain of perfectness," or the perfect bond.

Ez. 7:23,

"Make a chain,
For the land is full of bloody judgment,
And the city is full of violence."

"Make a chain," to denote that the people will be led away captive in chains. It was a symbolic action, Ez. 16:11,

"I put bracelets upon thy hands,
And a chain upon thy neck."

Newcome says, ribab, in Arabic, denotes "a variegated collar of wool hung for ornament about the neck of an animal."

"It pictore summo Flexili oborta per collum circulus aur."

Virg. Aen. 5, 538.

Paul mentions his chain as a prisoner repeatedly, viz. in Ac. 28:20, Ep. 6:20, 2 Ti. 1:16; i. e. Paul's right hand was fastened to the soldier's left hand, after the manner of the Romans, with a long chain. The scholiast on Juvenal says, "that it is called a camp-prison when the captives are delivered chained, so that the same chain fastens both the prisoner and soldier."

Sometimes, for further security, they were bound to two soldiers, with two chains, as was Peter's case. See Ac. 12:6. See also Pliny, b. 10, ep. 30; Seneca, ep. 5; and liber de Transquill. c. 10.

Pr. 1:9, parental instruction is beautifully compared to chains about the neck. One of the rabbinical writers has a similarly elegant expression, Vajher Rabba, § 12, "The words of the law are a coronet to the head, a chain to the neck, tranquillity to the heart, and a collyrium to the eyes." The Egyptian judges used to wear a golden chain about the neck, with a gem suspended, on which was engraved Truth. Diod. Sic. b. 1.

That eminent persons were thus adorned is plain from the honors paid to Joseph and Daniel, Ge. 41:42, and Da. 5:7, 16, 29.

Brides also received these as parts of their attire, as appears from Song 1:10, and 4:9. Selden, in his Uxor Hebreæ, quotes from the Gemara Hierosol. this passage: "Velamina sponsi sunt sindones acupicta, quibus appenduntur monilia aurea." Penelope also receives a gold chain from her suitor Eurytanus, thus, as Homer tells us. And Hesiod, describing the dress of a virgin, in his Works and Days, v. 74, says, "They put golden chains upon her person." Ornaments of gold, and particularly chains, belong to the costume of very high antiquity. "Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul, who clothed you in scarlet, with other delights; who put on ornaments of gold upon your apparel?" 2 S. 1:24; Judith 10:4.

CHARIOT. Chariots are the symbol of government, protection, and guardianship, exercised by princes, and by those who resemble them, towards the people, their inferiors.

In this sense, Elisha exclaimed, respecting Elijah, the eminent prophet and teacher of Israel, 2 K. 2:12, "O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof; an exclamation repeated by Joash the king of Israel, on occasion of the death of Elisha, 2 K. 13:14;—meaning, that these two excellent men availed more to their countrymen by their prayers and pious example than the kings of the nations do by their warlike chariots and horsemen. Compare Ez. 27:14 with Re. 18:13, where chariots and horsemen are enumerated among the wealth of Tyre and Babylon, as being part of their wealth and support.

Chariots are the symbol of armies and their leaders. See Ex. 15:4, "Pharaoh's chariots and his host hath he cast into the sea;" 2 K. 18:24, "Wilt thou put thy trust in Egypt for chariots and for horsemen?" is the language of Rab-shakeh; and that of his master is thus represented, 2 K. 19:23, "With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon."

Psalms 80,

"Some trust in chariots, and some in horses;
But we will remember the name of Jehovah our God.
They are brought down and fallen;
But we are risen and stand upright."

Compare Ps. 76:7, Is. 2:7, 31:1. So Jer. 50:37, "A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots." See also Jo. 2:5, Mi. 5:10.

Chariots are also the emblems of the heavenly host. This we learn from 2 K. 6:17, where the mountain round Elisha appeared, to the opened eyes of his servant, full of horses and chariots of fire. This appears also from Ps. 81:18, "The chariots of God are two myriads, even thousands of angels; the Lord is among them as in Sinai, in the holy place." This seems to look back on De. 33:2,

"Jehovah came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir to them;
He shined forth from mount Paran,

And he came with ten thousand of his holy ones;
Upon his right hand went a fiery law for them.'

Something similar is the language of Isaiah, 66:15;

'For behold, Jehovah shall come as a fire,
And his chariot as a whirlwind:
To baffle forth his anger in a burning heat,
And his rebuke in flames of fire.'

And so in Isa. 3:8,

'Was thine indignation against the seas,
When thou didst ride on thine horses, and on thy chariots of deliverance?'

A description of the royal chariot of Solomon is given in Song 3:9,10, which shows the luxury of those times; but it probably means a litter or palanquin.

In 1 Ch. 28:18, 'Gold is said to be given for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubim.' See CHERUBIM.

The chariot mentioned in Is. 21:7, with two riders, is supposed to represent Darius and Cyrus, the Medes and the Persians. See LOWTH IN loc.

The four chariots in Zech. 6:1, drawn by horses of different colors, represent the four great empires of the world in succession, the Assyrian or Babylonian, the Persian, Grecian, and Roman, distinguishable both by their order and attributes. Blayney.

Song 1:9,

'I have compared thee, O my love,
To a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.'

The comparison of a beautiful woman to a set of horses harnessed in a chariot, may perhaps appear unctuous to the refined manners of this age; but the Greek and Latin poets abound in similar comparisons. Thus Lycophron calls Helen a heifer, and Euripides calls Polypena a calf, and Horace compares a young woman to a mare, lib. 3, ode 2. See Durell on the passage.

Chariots on our side betoken courage in us, and safety and skill, with success in feats of arms. But if they belong to the other side, then, by the rule of contraries, they denote dread and consternation, and ill success in war.

CHERUBIM. Much has been written on this mysterious subject, particularly by the Hutchinsonian divines, whose opinions may be seen in Parkhurst's Hebrew Lexicon on the term.

The cherubim are mentioned or described in the following passages, viz. Gr. 3:24. Ex. 25:18, 22, and 37:7, 9. Le. 16:2. Nu. 7:89. 1 K. 6:23, 25, and 87. 2 Ch. 3:10, 13, and 55. Ez. 15:11, 19, and 20, 22.

They are also probably alluded to in Is. ch. 6. Re. ch. 4. Wisd. 9:8. He. 9:5.

It is agreed by most expositors that they were emblems of something beyond themselves; but the question is, Of what were they emblematical?

Parkhurst says they represented the ever-blessed Trinity, and the human nature of Jesus Christ.

Lownam thinks they represent angels.

In Ge. 3:23, they are spoken of as posted at the entrance of Paradise, after Adam and Eve were expelled from it.

Taylor, in his Hebrew Concordance, says the cherubim must be considered as hieroglyphical, denoting the perfection or combination of all spiritual and moral excellencies, which constitute the character of God's faithful servants or subjects.

Newcome is of Taylor's opinion.

Mode supposes them to be angels, but considers the cherubim, or four living creatures in the Apocalypse, to represent the Christian churches in the four regions of the world, corresponding to the four standards of Israel, and their ensigns, which, he says, were those of a lion, an ox, a man, and an eagle.

Doddridge considers them to be hieroglyphical representations of the angelic nature, and condemns the Hutchinsonian scheme, which makes them emblems of the Deity, as a very great absurdity.

Reynolds (of Angels) thinks the four animals described in Re. 4:7, represent spirits of an order superior to angels, taken up wholly in contemplation.

Pierce, Whately, and Macknight all consider them as representations of angels.

Glossins, Philol. Sacra, p. 777, after quoting a singular opinion of Musenius, who supposes them to have been a species of large and terrible fowls, because they are described as winged, says, 'But most other interpreters by the cherubim understand the angels of God.'

Milton refers to this symbolic representation, when he says of the cherubic shapes—

'Nor less on either side tempestuous fell.'

'Hs. arrows from the four-fold visaged four,
Injunct with eyes; and from the living wheels,
Injunct with multitude of eyes.'

Par. Lost, b. 6.

But, with due deference to the fore-named author, may we not suggest the probability, that these cherubim neither represented angels nor divine substances, but were simply the accompaniments of the chariot-throne of the Deity? God is described as a King, and, in accommodation to our ideas, he is spoken of as exhibiting regal state, and as occupying a throne or royal seat, which at times is stationary, but which, when put in motion, in accordance with the infinite activity attributed to the Supreme Being, is set before us as surrounded by wonderful forms, supported by various emblematic figures, and attended with the greatest pomp and splendor of divinity. We are confounded by the noise of the restless wheels, awed by the vision of innumerable eyes, and dazzled by the brightness of the celestial fire which shines around it. Milton has very well copied the prophet's description, Par. Lost, b. 6, l. 750,

'Forth rushed with whirlwind sound
The chariot of paternal Deity,
Flashing thick flames, wheel within wheel undrawn;
Itself instinct with spirit; but convolved
By four cherubic shapes; four faces each
Had wonderous; na with saw their bodies all,
And wings were set with eyes, with eyes the wheels
Of beryl, and carven fire between.'

In 1 Ch. 28:18, the form of this throne is referred to, where it is said, 'He gave gold for the pattern of the chariot of the cherubim, that spread out their wings,' &c.

In Ps. 68:17, these chariots are described as numerous, as if the angels also occupied such, when they attend in procession on the Deity.

In 2 S. 21:11, and Ps. 18:10, which are corresponding scriptures, God is said 'to ride upon a cherub, and to fly,' i.e. perhaps in a cherubic chariot.

As the description here given is that of a violent storm, all the elements being in commotion, and all things carried along with great rapidity, so the language employed is intended to express the vehemence, celerity, and magnificent effect of the divine movements and appearance.

The Chaldee renders it thus:

'He was revealed in his majesty over the swiftest cherubim, and he rode valiantly on the wings of the wind.'

In allusion to the cherubic figures which cover the mercy-seat, where the 'glory' or Shechinah appeared, God is repeatedly described as 'the Lord which dwelleth between the cherubim,' for, whether stationary or in motion, these seem to be his attendants.

There is a singular passage in Ez. 28:14, 15, where he compares the king of Tyre to 'the anointed cherub that covered the ark of the covenant.' Newcome thus translates it:

'I made thee as the anointed covering cherub;
Thou wast upon the holy mountain of God;
Thou didst remain amidst the stones of fire;
Thou wast perfect in thy ways, from the day when thou wast born,
Until iniquity was found in thee.'

In this lamentation, wisdom, beauty, magnificence, splendor, and perfection are attributed to the king of Tyre. He likewise bore an exalted and sacred office. On these accounts he is compared to one of the angelic orders.

Mr. Lowth thus paraphrases the passage:

'Such was thy eminent distinction, that thou wast, as it were, placed in the temple of God, on his holy mountain. Thou wast, as it were, conversant among the twelve precious stones on the breastplate of the high-priest, which shone like fire.' Whenever God, who dwelt between the cherubim, was approached, the high-priest wore his breastplate. Ex. 28:30. 1 S. 28:6.

CITY. A city and its inhabitants are frequently described in the sacred writings under the similitude of a mother and her children. Hence the phrase, 'children of Zion,' in Jo. 2:23. As the temple was situated on mount Zion, hence the city of Jerusalem came to be denoted by it, because a principal part of it. See the same expression, Ps. 149:2. Thus, also, Horace:

¹Roma principis urbium
Signatur suboles inter amabiles
Vatum ponere me choros.
²Carm. b. 4, odo 3.

Cities are characterized as virgins, wives, widows, and harlots, according to their different conditions. Thus:

Jerusalem is called a virgin, in Is. 37:22. Jer. 18: 1a, 1:15, and other places; and Egypt is so named in Jer. 46:11.

Babylon is called a widow, in Is. 47:8, 9, and Jerusalem, in La. 1:1.

And the term harlot is used of Jerusalem, Is. 1:21; of Tyre, Is. 23:16; of Nineveh, Na. 3:4; and of Samaria, Ez. 23:5.

When a body politic comes under the symbol of an animal, and is so considered as one body, the head thereof, by the rule of analogy, is its capital city. Thus in Is. 7:8, 9, a capital is a head, and taken for all the territories belonging to it.

And the Roman authors affected to call Rome the head of the world. See Ovid, Met. b. 15, v. 435; Livy, Hist. b. 21, c. 39; Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. 3, c. 5; Val. Max. b. 8, c. 14.

By the same rule cities, inferior to the general head, are themselves capital cities, and therefore heads to their respective provinces.

See under MOTHER.

GREAT CITY. See under BABYLON.

No. 22:39, 'And Balaam went with Balak, and they came to a city of streets;' Korath-huzoth, in our version. The Vulgate has, 'a city which was in the remotest bounds of his kingdom.'

CLOTHED. To be clothed, is a metaphor frequently used to signify, to be accompanied with, adorned, covered, or protected; as Jn. 7:5, 'My flesh is clothed with worms'; Jb. 39:19, 'Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?' Or, as Durell renders it, with pride. Ps. 33:29, 'Let them be clothed with shame and dishonor.'

Ps. 93:1, 'Jehovah is clothed with majesty,
Jehovah is clothed with strength.'

Paul also uses it in 2 Co. 5:2, 'Desiring to be clothed with our house which is from heaven.'

And in Ro. 13:14, 'Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ.'

In Jud. 6:31, 'The Spirit of the Lord came upon (it, clothed) Gideon.'

I S. 17:5, 'Goliath was clothed with a coat of mail.'

Ps. 65:13, 'The pastures are clothed with flocks.'

In reference to the term clothed as applied to divine influence, we find in Lu. 24:29, 'Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued or invested, ενδύομενοι, with power from on high.' And by a like phrase, the Spirit is said to rest upon Christ and his disciples, Is. 12:1. 1 Pe. 4:14.

CLOUD. A cloud, without any token, showing it to be like a storm, always denotes what is good, and implies success.

It is in general the symbol of protection, because it preserves from the scorching heat of the sun, i.e. anguish and persecution; and as it likewise distils a rain or cool and benign influence. It is thus used by Horace, b. 1, odo 2, v. 31; and by Homer, Il. 5, v. 186.

And therefore in Sophocles' Electra, p. 134, ἀνέφαλον κακον, a cloudless evil, from which nothing can protect, as the author himself explains it.

Clouds, by the Indian Interpreter, c. 163, are explained of wisdom.

In the next chapter, a king's riding upon the clouds, is interpreted by the Persian and Egyptian, of foreign nations serving him—of his ruling over them—and of his being exceedingly prosperous and successful.

In the holy writers, the clouds are frequently the symbols of God's power. Thus Ps. 68:34, 'His strength is in the clouds,' though strictly speaking, the term here rendered clouds, means the ether or air. See also 2 S. 22:12. Ps. 104:3. Na. 1:3.

Ps. 89:6, 'Who is he in the clouds that can be compared to Jehovah?'

Clouds are more especially the symbol of multitudes and armies, as in Jer. 4:13,

'Behold, like clouds he shall come up,
And as a whirlwind his chariot.'

meaning the person designed by the lion and the destroyer of nations, namely, the king of Babylon.

Is. 69:8,

'Who are these that fly like a cloud,
And like doves upon the wing?'

The following is Erasmus's note upon this passage: 'The clouds fly aloft, that they may moisten and render fruitful the earth below. Even so the ministers of the gospel, raised far above terrene desires, and bordering upon heaven, replenish the grovelling and sterile minds of men with the rains of the heavenly word, that, the thorns and briars being cleared away, they may bring forth fruit worthy of God. They fly like clouds, every where diffusing the grace of the gospel; but they fly, too, like doves to their windows; for they make not their nest in the ground, but in the hollow of some lofty rock, that, by their continual sighs and prayers, they may excite the grovelling mind to a love of the heavenly life.'

He. 12:1, 'Seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses,' &c.; a very just comparison, seeing that clouds are composed of innumerable drops of rain or watery vapor. So in the poets, multitudes are compared to clouds. As in Homer, Il. 4, v. 273, a cloud of foot is a great company of foot-soldiers. And Livy has, a cloud of infantry and horsemen; and Epiphanius, a cloud of flies; and Jerome, a cloud of locusts. Ajay, in Homer, calls Hector the cloud of war. Virgil makes Aeneas sustain the cloud of war—

'Sic obviro unique tris
Anas, tamen bellum dum detinet, omnem
Sustinet.'

En. 10, 808.

To these may be added a passage from Justin, where the growing power of the Romans is compared to a rising cloud : Isr. 29, c. 3, 'Videre se ait consurgentem in Italia nubes illam tristes et cruentum bellum, videre tonantem ac fulminantem ab occasu procellam, quam in quasunque terrarum partes victoriae tempestas deuteratur, magno cruxis imbre omnia fedaturum.'

A white cloud is a symbol of good success to him who is assisted by it, and is therefore explained of prosperity by Artemidorus, in book 2.

Peter compares seducers to clouds carried about with a tempest, 2 Pe. 2:17, setting forth by this similitude the inconstancy of their doctrine, and fickleness of their dispositions, as well as their deceitfulness, like clouds that promise rain, and yet are scattered without yielding any. See Ju. 12.

Solomon compares the infirmities of old age, which arise successively one after another, to 'clouds returning after rain,' Ec. 12:2.

Is. 45: 'There is a manifest allusion to the pillar of cloud and of fire which attended the Israelites in their passage out of Egypt, and to the glory that rested on the tabernacle. The prophet Zechariah applies the same image to the same purpose,' 2:5.

'And I will be unto her a wall of fire round about,

And a glory will I be in the midst of her;'

i. e. the visible presence of God shall protect her.

In Pr. 16:15, the favor of a king is compared to a cloud of the latter rain, refreshing and fertilizing the earth.

The sudden disappearance of threatening clouds from the sky is beautifully employed in Is. 44:22, as a figure for the blotting out of transgressions. Demosthenes has a passage like it, which was admired by Longinus, as quoted by Lowth, 'This decree made the danger, then hanging over the city, to pass away, like a cloud.'

Re. 1:7: 'The majesty of Christ's appearance is described by saying, "Behold he cometh with clouds," by which some understand, not literal clouds, but the angels of the host of heaven. See Da. 7:13. Mat. 24:30.'

Re. 10:1, 'And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven, clothed with a cloud.' To come in the clouds or with the clouds of heaven, is among the Jews a known symbol of divine power and majesty. Grotius observes a like notion among the heathen, that they represented their deities appearing covered with a cloud,—

'Tandem venias, precamer,
Nube caedeo humeros amictus,
Angor Apollo.'

In Ps. 27:2, 'Clouds and darkness' appear to be put as representing the mysterious nature of the divine operations in his government of the world.

A day of clouds is taken for a season of calamity, as in Ez. 30:3, 34:12. Jo. 2:2. Zph. 1:15, a metaphor which the poet uses,

'Tempora si fuerint oculis, solus eris.'

Is. 19:1,

'Behold, Jehovah cometh

'On a swift cloud, and cometh to Egypt,' intimating the speediness of the divine infliction on that country. Clouds in Egypt are generally regarded as inauspicious, since they are rare in that climate, the overflowing of the Nile sufficing for humidity.

Re. 13:14, 'And I looked, and beheld a white cloud, and upon the cloud one sat, like unto the Son of man.'

Christ himself seems here represented, sitting upon a bright cloud, which was spread under him, as a seat of judgment.

Zch. 10:1,

'The Lord shall make bright clouds;

or rather,

'Jehovah will make ready the lightnings.'

See Newcome.

La. 3:4,

'Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud,

That our prayer should not pass through.'

God is said at all times to dwell in light inaccessible; and when He is described, as here, covering Himself with a cloud, it means his unwillingness to admit sinners to communion with Him — to them He cannot be propitious, nor can He have any commerce with them, because they despise his forbearance.

COLOR, which is outwardly seen on the habit of the body, is symbolically used to denote the true state of the person or subject, to which it is applied, according to its nature.

Black. See under BLACK.

Pale signifies diseases, mortality, and afflictions arising from them. It is a usual epithet of death. 'Pallida mors,' say the poets. Hence the pale horse, in Re. 6:8, has death for his rider, and the grave for his attendant, and a commission is given to him to slay the fourth part of the earth, i. e. of the heathen Roman empire, by the sword, famine, pestilence, and wild beasts — a commission which is supposed to have been executed during the reigns of Maximus, Decius, Gallus, Volvian, and Valerian. St. Cyprian notices this period in his apology to Clemens the proconsul, and expressly declares his judgment, that these great calamities were according to former predictions, and brought upon the world, not because the Christians rejected the idolatrous Roman worship, but because the Romans rejected the worship of the true God.

Red denotes joy, with or after a great battle or slaughter. In Ps. 68:23, red and blood are explanatory of each other. Is. 1:18, 'Though your sins be red like crimson.'

⁴ Neque amlsos colores
Lana refer mediatu [sic].

says the poet, applying the same image to a different purpose. To discharge these strong colors is impossible to human art or power; but to the grace and power of God all things, even much more difficult, are possible and easy. See Louth in loc.

Is. 63:2, 'Wherefore is thine apparel red, and thy garments as one that treadeth the wine-vat?' See Louth on the passage, and comp. Re. 19:13, &c.

Zch. 1:8, 'I saw in the night a man riding on a red horse,' i. e. an angel in the shape of a man. See v. 11, and La. 24:4, 'Three horses follow him, red, dun, and white, whose riders were angels.' They have horses, to show their power and celerity; and horses of different colors, to intimate the difference of their ministries. See Re. 6:4.

In Zch. 6:2, the red horses are understood to denote the bloody Assyrian empire; but see Newcome.

Re. 12:3, Satan or Antichrist is represented by a great red or blood-colored dragon, to describe both his power and cruelty in opposing true religion.

White, the symbol of beauty, comeliness, joy, and riches. Est. 8:15, 'Mordecai went out in white apparel.' Ec. 9:8, 'Let thy garments be always white.'

White clothes are not only the pleasantest in a warm country, as was Palestine, but also the most expensive, as they cannot be worn so long as those of other colors; luxury is therefore here combined with cost.

This color, as being of great lustre, and as denoting purity, is attributed to the Ancient of Days in Da. 7:9, to Jesus Christ in Re. 1:14, to the garb of angels in several places, and to the throne of God in Re. 20:11.

White or shining garments are marks of favor and honor; under the law, they were the garments of the priests, and worn in the courts of princes. Thus Pharaoh honored Joseph, by arraying him in vestures of fine linen, as well as putting a gold chain about his neck. Ge. 41:42. A white garment, as the emblem of purity, is promised to the church at Sardis, (Re. 3:4) and is interpreted of the righteousness of saints, (Re. 19:8) as well as a mark of honor. Whence we see the propriety of this emblem, to express the peculiar honor and favor God would show to them who remained constant and faithful in the purity of the Christian doctrine, worship, and life.

COLUMN, or PILLAR. These, it is well known, were erected anciently to commemorate great exploits or extraordinary events.

When connected with a building, they might be called emblems of stability; but when standing alone, they were memorial monuments, to record matters that were useful, whether legislative or historical; 'James, Cephas, and John, who seem to be pillars, that is, supporters of the edifice of the church, considered as a building,—the pillar and basis of truth,' — this last seems to refer to a monument on which something is inscribed. The 16th Psalm, in the Greek version, has for its αγνοησαβα, an inscription on a pillar, as if that psalm related to a conqueror, whose triumphs were recorded. 'We know who the victor was who is there commemorated.'

The custom of consecrating stones among the heathen seems to have taken its rise from Jacob's setting up the stone which he had put for his pillow, and pouring oil upon the top of it, and afterwards calling the place Bethel or Bit-al, the house of God, Ge. 28:18. From this the learned Bochart insists, that the name and veneration of the sacred stones, called Batyl, so celebrated in all pagan antiquity, were derived. These Batyl were stones of a round form, and were consulted, on particular occasions, as a kind of divine oracles; affording a proof, among many others, how closely the pagan world imitated, and how basely they perverted, the religious rites of the ancient patriarchs. Thus the setting up of a stone by Jacob, in grateful memory of a celestial vision, and as a monument of the divine goodness, which had so conspicuously guarded him in his journey, probably became the occasion of all the idolatry paid, in succeeding ages, to those shapeless masses of unhewn stones, of which so many astonishing remains are scattered up and down the Asiatic, and even the European, world. See Maurice, v. n. p. 356.

CROCODILE. The term does not occur in our English version, nor yet in the Septuagint, except in one instance, viz. in La. 12:29, where, instead of the tortoise, the Seventy has the crocodile. The Hebrew here has tsib.

That the Hebrew tsib and tsibah signify the crocodile, has been maintained by several writers of authority. See Harmer's Observ. v. iv. ; Bochart's Hieroz. ; Schenck's Physica Sacra ; Scott on Job ; Durell, Parkhurst, and others.

The principal passages in which the term occurs in this sense, are the following:

Jb. 7:12,

'Art I sea, or a crocodile (tsibin), that thou settest a watch over me?'

Harmer so explains it, Observ. v. iv. p. 286, and remarks that the Egyptians watch the crocodile with great attention, to prevent its doing mischief.

Jb. 38:5,

'Let them execute it, who curse the (nash) d. y.
Of those who are about to rouse up the crocodile (tsibin),' which was almost sure to be attended with immediate and horrid destruction. See Jb. 41:8,9,10.

Js. 27:1,

'In that day shall Jehovah punish with his sword, His well-tempered, great, and strong sword, Leviathan the rigid serpent, Leviathan the winding serpent, And shall slay the crocodile (tsibin) that is in the sea.'

Is. 51:9,

'Awake, awake, clothe thyself with strength, O arm of Jehovah,
Awake, as in the days of old, the ancient generations;
Art thou not the name that smote Rahab, that wounded the crocodile (tsibin)?

In allusion to God's victory over Pharaoh, as appears from the 10th verse.

Ez. 29:3,

'Thus saith the Lord Jehovah: I, I am against thee, Pharaoh, king of Egypt, The great crocodile (tsibin), that lieth in the midst of his rivers,
That saith, My rivers are mine own, and I have made them for myself.'

Pharaoh, elsewhere called Hophra, and by Herodotus, Apries, is supposed to be meant here, of whom that historian affirms, b. 2, § 109, 'This is said to have been the persuasion of Apries, that no god was able to deprive him of his kingdom,' — language which well agrees with the vain boasting used above.

When he says rivers, in the plural, he probably refers to the seven months of the Nile, to the streams which emptied themselves into it, and the channels or canals that were cut from it.

Ez. 32:9,

'Say unto Pharaoh, king of Egypt,
Thou art like a lion among the nations,
Thou art as a crocodile (tsibin) in the seas,
And troughest forth in thy rivers,
And troughest the waters with thy feet, and foulest thy rivers.'

From these and other passages, it appears that the term which our English translators render 'dragon,' is applied, not merely to the serpent tribe, but to any large or ferocious creature, which in its form or qualities resembles the serpent, such as the crocodile of the Nile.

In Ps. 74:13, where Asaph says,

'Thou didst divide the sea by thy strength,
Thou didst break the heads of the crocodiles (tsibim) in the water.'

there is a plain allusion to the destruction of the power and host of Pharaoh at the Red Sea. To which we may also refer Ps. 68:30, where instead of 'Rebuke the company of spearmen,' read, 'Rebuke the wild beast of the reeds,' i. e. the crocodile, which lurks among the reeds of the Nile, and is a common figure of the kings of Egypt.

The crocodile, then, is the symbol of Egypt, and appears as such on Roman coins. In Schenck's Physica Sacra may be seen a medal, with Julius Caesar's head on one side, and on the reverse a crocodile, with this inscription :

'Egypto capta,' i. e. Egypt taken.

There is also a coin of Augustus, representing a crocodile chained to a palm tree, with the inscription, 'C. NEM.', in memory of Egypt being taken by Augustus after Antony.

A crocodile fastened with a chain to a palm-tree, is to be seen on ancient coins, with the inscription, 'C. AIO.,' i. e. Colonia Aegyptus. On the other side are two human heads, of which one looks to the east, ornamented with a naval crown, — the letters above are Imp., where by the crocodile is signified Egypt, and Imp. is Imperator, or Augustus. The two heads are those of Augustus and Agrippa, of whom Virgil says,

'Tempore navali fulgent rostrata corona.'

When the painter Nealeus, whom Pliny mentions, wished to paint the naval engagement of the Egyptians and Persians, which took place in the Nile, he deserved that by a hieroglyphic, which he could not accomplish by art. He drew a young ass drinking on the shore, and a crocodile lying in wait for it.

But since Egypt, in prophetic language, is a type of the antichristian power, which is spiritually called Egypt, in Re. 11:8, we may, without impropriety, extend several of these Old Testament references, and apply them to the character, language, and future destinies of that power.

In Re. 13:1, Antichrist is compared to a 'beast rising up out of the sea,' in allusion to the crocodile, which is amphibious.

For a more particular description of the crocodile, see Jb. ch. 41, and Bochart's Commentary; also Norden's Travels, Hasselquist's Voyages, Harmer's Observations, 4th vol., and Sir George Staunton's Embassy to China, vol. i.

That the crocodile was anciently, among the Egyptians, a symbol of the sun, appears from its figure on the throne of Isis, as has been shown by several authors, and agrees with what Jambliehus writes on the Egyptian mysteries, and Eusebius, in his Preparatio Evang. lib. 3, cap. 3.

Among the Indians on the Malabar coast, crocodiles were accounted the ministers or avengers of the divine justice. And the boats of the Siamese, in which they carry out their dead, exhibit the figure of a crocodile.

Lucian, Philo, and Horapollo represent the crocodile to have been the emblem of craft, malice, and impudence; and Clemens Alexandrinus attributes to it the latter quality, especially in his Syntagma, lib. 5.

Bochart and others maintain, that Peres, or Pharaoh, in the ancient language of Egypt, signifies 'crocodile'; while Josephus and Pfeiffer say, that it properly means 'king,' or 'my king,' which, however, appears doubtful, since we often find, in Scripture, the title of king annexed to Pharaoh, which in that case would be a vain tautology. It may be remarked, that per, in Hebrew, among its other meanings, has that of 'starting aside or apostatizing from the true religion and worship,' in which case, Pharaoh may be considered as equivalent to apostate.

That crocodiles were formerly objects of worship, on account of the fear entertained of them by the common people, is well known. See Aelian de Animalib. lib. 10, cap. 21; Diadornus Siculus, lib. 1, p. 52; Strabo, Herodotus, and other authors. Juvenal also has this passage:

'Egips nescit Volusi Bithynicus, qualia demens

'Egyptus portenta colat; crocodilum adorat.'

Lib. 4, Sat. 15.

Danuhay says, the crocodile was called by the Arabians Pharaoh, and was held by the Egyptians as the symbol of all mischief. And therefore Typho being, in their belief, the author of all evils, was supposed to have transformed himself into a crocodile or dragon. So that the principle of evil, or Typho, was, in the symbolical character, represented by a crocodile or dragon, and under this symbol was worshipped. Agreeably whereto, in the Chaldean theology, the principle of evil was called Arimanus, i. e. the crafty serpent.

It is the passage in Ez. 29:3, as well as the history itself, in the book of Exodus, which Milton has probably in view, Par. Lost. b. 12, l. 190:

'Thus with ten wounds,

The river dragon tamed, at length submits,' &c.

D'Herbelot cites an Eastern poet, who, celebrating the prowess of a most valiant Persian prince, said,

'He was dreadful as a lion in the field,

And not less terrible in the water as a crocodile.'

a comparison which agrees remarkably with that used by Ezekiel, 32:2, already quoted. The phrase used there of 'breathing forth,' may refer to the act of the crocodile when he bursts above the water to seize his prey; or, as Gosselin supposes, raising the head above the water, for the purpose of breathing more freely — 'ut respiratione se reficiant.'

In Is. 27:1, Leviathan is called 'the straight or rigid serpent,' the crocodile having a remarkably straight, rigid, and inflexible body, so that he cannot easily turn himself in pursuing his prey.

CROWN. In Hebrew, ceter, whence the Greek, κίρας, a diadem.

Diadems are constantly the symbols of an imperial or auto-cratorical power, extending itself over all sorts of power, civil and ecclesiastical.

Erhaboi, translated crowns, are symbols of an inferior, feditary, or delegated power; so that there is the same difference between them and diadems as there is between a royal or imperial crown and a coronet; and therefore the crown or coronet is by the Indian Interpreter, c. 247, explained of the second person to the king, or the prime minister of state. So that the crown or coronet is the symbol of judicial power and dominion inferior to the supreme.

And it is also the symbol of victory and reward, it being customary for conquerors to be crowned.

The mitre of the high-priest was called by the ancient Greeks tura, cidaris, and sometimes diadema; they wore a sort of linen turban, commonly white; and such were the diademas of kings, which Ammannus calls Fasciolum candidum, Regis Majestatis insigne. This little covering of the head, with the plate of gold, on which 'Holiness to the Lord' was inscribed, is called the holy crown. So that a turban, with a gold ornament, in the language of the Scripture, is a crown of gold. Le. 8:9.

Re. 19:12, 'On his head were many crowns, to show his numerous conquests and large empire.'

Among the ancients, the crown was a symbol of dignity and authority — of comeliness and ornament — and sometimes of love. See Lucian, Eniphius, and Anacreon, who use it in these various senses.

The Magi used to wear a tiara, as we learn from Pausanias, Eliae, lib. 5, 'But a Magus entering into the temple, and having placed some dry wood upon the fire, covered his head with a tiara, and invoked some deity, I know not whom.' Strabo mentions the like, lib. 15.

That ambassadors wore something of the kind appears from Clandian:

'Mississe rogatum
Federis Persarum proter, cum patre sedente
Hac quoniam videre domo, postquam tara
Subnubere genuit.'

The church is finely compared to a crown by the prophet Isaiah, 62:3,

'And thou shalt have a beautiful crown in the hand of Jehovah; And a royal diadem in the grasp of God.'

CUP is used as a symbol in Scripture in various senses.

It is employed to describe the practices of the false church, in Re. 17:4, 'Having a golden cup in her hand,' denoting the enticing means and specious pretences by which the antichristian church allure people to idolatry, particularly by sensuality, luxury, and affluence. There is an allusion to the philtrees, or love potions, which lewd women used to prepare for the purposes of debauchery, and of inflaming the passions of their paramours. The cup is said to be 'full of abominations and filthiness of her fornication.' With this agrees the prophecy of Jeremiah, 51:7, where Babylon is called 'a golden cup in the hand of Jehovah'; i. e. she was a splendid instrument of vengeance ordained by God against the neighboring nations; and as all these had suffered by her, all are represented as ready to glory over her, or to rejoice when her turn of suffering came. That a cup is the symbol of idolatry and its rites, appears also from Paul's expression in 1 Cor. 10:21, 'Ye cannot drink of the cup of the Lord and the cup of demons.' In the heathen sacrifices, as Macknight observes, the priests, before they poured the wine upon the victim, tasted it themselves; then carried it to the offerers, and to those who came with them, that they also might taste it, as joining in the sacrifice, and receiving benefit from it. Thus Virgil, Aen. 8, 273,

'Quare agite, O juvenes,' &c.

'For these deities, and this high virtue shown,
Ye warlike youths, your heads with garlands crown,
Fill high the goblets with a sparkling flood,
And with deep draughts invoke our common god.'

Dryden.

Wine, mixed with bitter ingredients, was usually given to malefactors when they were going to be put to death. And therefore, by a metonymy of the adjunct, the mixed bitter cup of wine is the symbol of torment or death, as in Ps. 75:8;

'In the hand of Jehovah there is a cup, and the wine is turbid;
It is full of a mixed liquor, and he poureth out of it:
Verily the dregs thereof all the anguish of the earth shall wring them out, and drink them.'

But no where is this image of the cup of God's wrath presented with more force and sublimity than in Is. 51:17, &c., where Jerusalem is represented as staggering under the effects of it, destitute of that assistance which she might expect from her own children, not one of them being able to support or lead her.

Plato has an idea something like this, which Louth refers to in his note.

As the evil which happens to men is the effect of God's justice and severity, and the good which happens to them is the effect of his bounty and goodness; therefore, in the sacred writings, the one is represented by a cup of wrath, and the other under the symbol of a cup of salvation, Ps. 116:13, and of drinking of the river of pleasures, Ps. 36:8, at the right hand of God. Ps. 16:11.

So Homer places two vessels at the threshold of Jupiter, one of good, the other of evil; he gives to some a potion mixed of both, to others from the evil vessel only. II. 24, line 527, &c.

'Two urns by Jove's high throne have ever stood,
The source of evil one, and one of good;
From thence the cup of mortal man he fills,
Blessings to these, to those distributes ill.
To stout he mingleth both, 'tis wrench forced
To taste the bitter draught, is cursed indeed;
Purified by wrong, by misery and driven,
He wanders, outcast both of earth and heaven,
The happiest taste not happiness sincere,
But find the cordial draught is dashed with care.'

When our Savior asks James and John whether they were able to drink of the cup which he was to drink of, Mat. 20:22, he means, whether they had resolution and patience to undergo the like sufferings and afflictions as his Father had allotted for him. And in the like sense he prays, Mat. 26:39, 'O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me.'

The image of a cup as a portion, seems to have been borrowed from the ancient custom of the master of the feast appointing to each of the guests his cup, i. e. his kind and measure of libid, as in the following passage from the Iliad, b. 4, 291,

'For this, in banquets, when the generous bowls
Restore our blood, and raise the warrior's soul,
Though all the rest with stated rules are bound,
Unmixed, unmeasured, are thy goblets crowded.'

God says to Jeremiah, 25:15, 'Take the cup of the wine of this wrath from my hand, and tender it to all the nations to drink, unto whom I shall send thee,' &c., meaning thereby those heavy judgments which he was about to inflict on the objects of his displeasure. And the prophet, who announced them, is considered as acting the part of a cup-bearer, carrying the cup round to those who were appointed to drink of it, the effects of which were to appear in the intoxication, that is, in the terror and desolation that should prevail among them.

It is not to be imagined that the prophet went round in person to all the nations and kings here enumerated, but either that he did so in a vision, or else that he actually did what is figuratively designed; that is, he publicly announced the judgments of God severally against them, as we find in chapters 46 to 54, inclusive, and which the Seventy have introduced in this place.

Re. 14:10, 'The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out, without mixture, into the cup of his indignation.'

It has been already remarked, that it was usual to give malefactors a cup of wine before going to execution; but sometimes a cup was given them, in which some strong poison had been infused, on purpose to cause their death. Such was the well-known mode of dispatching Socrates. Gratus thinks the words without mixture, intimate that the poisonous ingredients were infused in pure, unmixed wine, to take a stronger tincture, and become a more deadly poison.

So in Zech. 12,

'Behold I will make Jerusalem
A cup trembling to all the people round about;
i. e., an inciting and stupefying potion of the strongest liquors and drags. Jerusalem shall strike the nations with dread and astonishment.'

On Ila. 2:16, Gratus observes, that verses 15 and 16 contain an allegory. The Chaldeans gave to the neighboring nations the cup of idolatry and deceitful alliance, and in return they received from Jehovah the cup of his fury.

Re. 18:6, 'In the cup which she hath filled, fill to her double.'

This is agreeable to the Jewish law of retaliation and restitution, which in some cases enjoined double punishment or damages. See Ex. 22:4.

The seven phials filled with the seven last plagues, are proper bowls or cups. That this emblem was not unknown to profane authors, appears from the writings of Plautus and Aristophanes, as has been shown by several.

We read in Jer. 13:7, of the 'cup of consolations,' in allusion to the funeral customs of the Jews, which, Sir John Chardin tells us, is still observed by the Oriental Christians, of sending provisions to the house of the deceased, where healths were also drunk to the survivors of the family, wishing that the dead may have been the victims for the sins of the family. The same is practised among the Moors. Of the Jewish method, we read this in Berach. Hieros. fol. 6: 'Ten cups were drunk at the house of the deceased; two before the funeral banquet, — five amidst the banquet, — and three after it was finished. Of these three last, one was intended for thanksgiving, another as an office of kindness, and the third for the consolation of the mourners. That the same custom prevailed among the Romans, is shown by Spencer, De Leg. Hebr. b. 4, c. 9.

Something similar seems to be hinted at in the closing lines of the Iliad; —

'All thythen moves to Prism's court again,
A solemn, silent, melancholy train;
Assumed there, from pious toil they rest,
And early shared the last sepulchral feast.'

The cup was an emblem of capital punishment, because, among the ancients, it was usual to inflict death, by presenting to the condemned a cup of hemlock or other poison, as was the case of Socrates. And hence we hear our Lord saying, 'The cup which my Father hath given me shall I not drink it?' And hence that expression in the Psalms, 'There is a cup in the hands of the Lord; all the wicked of the earth shall drink of it.'

D.

DARKNESS. As light is the symbol of joy and safety, so, on the contrary, darkness is the symbol of misery and adversity.

It is thus used in Jer. 13:16,

'Give ye glory to Jehovah your God,
Before it grows dark,
(that is, before the time of darkness or distress comes on.)
And before your feet stumble upon the mountains of gloominess.'

meaning those solitary and gloomy mansions at which when 'the dead' arrive, they may, by a poetical image, be supposed to stumble, because of the darkness, and to fall so as never to rise more. Compare Ps. 44:20; 143:3. Jb. 18:6.

The prophet Isaiah makes use of much the same images, 59:9,10, where he represents the people as complaining of the wretchedness of their situation :

'We look for light, but behold darkness;
For brightness, but we walk in obscurity.
We grope for the wall like the blind,
Even as those that are eyeless do we grope;
We stumble at mida'yan in the dusk,
In desolate places, like the dead.'

See also Ez. 30:18. 34:12. Is. 8:22. 9:1.

Athenodorus, examining the various significations of the air, as to its qualities, says, 'A gloomy, dark, overclouded air, signifies ill success, or want of power, and sorrow arising thereupon.'

Horace has the following simile, Ode iv, 4, 40:

'Pulcher fugatis
ille dies Lato tenebris.'

In Am. 4:13, 'That maketh the morning darkness,' there is supposed to be an allusion to the black clouds and smoke attending earthquakes. 'Des nuages noirs et épais (says a French writer) sont ordinairement les avant courreurs de ces funestes catastrophes.'

By 'a day of darkness,' in Jn. 2:2, the prophet intends to set forth the greatness of the people's distress by the sudden calamity of the locusts.

We find Cicero employing the same figurative language; 'Quid tandem, tum illis reipublice tenebris, cecisque nubibus et procelsis, cum securum a gubernaculis dejecuisse,' &c. (Pro domo sua.)

The following allegory, under which the fall of Pharaoh is threatened, is an instance of the manner of applying the figure, by which darkness is made to represent calamity, a topic on which the Hebrew writers give the full reins to poetical boldness. Ez. 32:7, 8.

'I will cover the heavens when I quench thee,
And I will hide the stars thereof with black;
I will cover the sun with a cloud,
And the moon shall not give her light,
All the shining lights of the heavens will I clothe with black over thee,
And I will set darkness upon thy land,
Saith the Lord Jehovah.'

Darkness is represented as the accompaniment of idolatrous rites. Ez. 8:12, 'Hast thou seen, O son of man, what the elders of the house of Israel do in the dark, every man in the chambers of his imagery?'

Milton refers to this in his Paradise Lost, b. 1, 455.

'By the vision led,

His eye surveyed the dark idolatries

Of alienated Judah.'

Darkness of the sun, moon, and stars, is an induction to denote a general darkness or deficiency in the government, as in Is. 13:10. Ez. 32:7, above quoted; Jn. 2:10, 31.

And the Oneirocritics, in ch. 107, explain the eclipses of the sun and moon — of obscurity, affliction, oppression, and the like, according to the subject.

Eph. 5:11, 'The works of darkness.'

The apostle calls the heathen mysteries works of darkness, because the impure actions which the initiated performed in them, under the sanction of religious rites, were done in the night time; and, by the secrecy in which they were acted, were acknowledged by the perpetrators to be evil. Macknight.

The term 'outer darkness,' which occurs in Mat. 8:12, and in other passages, is well explained by the learned Du Verd: 'Utitur Christus haec loquendi formula, quia agit hic de regno celorum sub similitudine cœni convivialis, quo quia de nocte fit, solet copioso teardum lumine celebrari. Itaque qui in cœnaculo sunt, in magno sunt lumine; qui extra, in magnis versantur tenebris.'

The state of the dead is often represented in Scripture under the image of darkness. Thus Jb. 10:21,

'Before I go whence I shall not return,
Even to the land of darkness, and the shadow of death,
A land of darkness, and the shades of death,
And the shadow of death, without any order,
And where the light is as darkness.'

And Jb. 17:13,

'If I wait, the grave is mine house;
I have made my bed in the darkness.'

Heathen writers employ the same image. Thus Lucan, b. vi. v. 712,

'Non in tartaro latitatem pescimus antro
Adstupnato diu tenebris, modis luce fugata,
Decadentem animam.'

Whence Callimachus inquires of the kingdom of Pluto, Epigr. 14,

'τι τὰ νέφελες; πολὺ σκότως.

'What is there below? Much darkness.'

Darkness is occasionally the emblem of ignorance; and the fitness of the one to represent the other is sufficiently obvious. Is. 9:2,

'The people that walked in darkness
Have seen a great light.'

Is. 60:2,

'Behold, darkness shall cover the earth,

And a thick vapor the nations.'

Mat. 6:23,

'If the light which is in thee be darkness,
How great is that darkness!'

See Campbell's note on this passage.

2 Co. 4:6; 'God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined into our hearts,' &c.

Jn. 3:19,

'Light hath come into the world,
But men have loved darkness rather than light,
Because their deeds were evil.'

Junivell has something like this, b. ii. v. 239:

'Quicunque malis vitam maculaverit actis,
Ad templa pacatis refugit, ne lumine claro
Soniida palluit patens contagio mortis.'

Darkness is sometimes the emblem of captivity: thus, Is. 47:5;

'Sat thou in silence, go into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans;

'For thou shalt no longer be called the lady of the kingdoms.'

La. 3:6,

'In the midst of darkness hath he caused me to dwell,
At those that have been dead of long time.'

Cicero uses similar expressions, Orat. 10, in Verri: 'Cum esset in carcere, in tenebris, in squalore, in sorribus tyrannicis interclusus tuis, pari excta estate.'

It is possible that there may be a reference to the phrase 'outer darkness' in that passage, Re. 22:15, where it is said, 'Without,' i. e., beyond the new or mystical Jerusalem, 'there are dogs, poisoners, whoremongers, murderers, and idolaters.' But it is more likely that allusion is there made to the outer court of the Gentiles. See under Dog.

DARNEL. The darnel or lolium, improperly called tares in our version, was anciently the symbol of corrupt manners, as Piers mentions in his Treatise de Hieroglyphicis, p. 405, 'Morum enim corruptiorum et omnino indicium est,' &c. 'Envious men,' says Plutarch, 'are as useless to a state, as darnel is to wheat.' And the epithet given to this plant by Virgil is well known:

'Grandia sepo quibus mandavimus horrea sulcis,
Infelix lolium, et steriles dominatur avenæ.'

DAY, as the time of light, and as opposed to darkness or night, is the symbol of a time of prosperity.

A day is often used, both in sacred and profane writings, for an indeterminate portion of time. The day of temptation in the wilderness was forty years. The day of the Lord is the time of judgment. And Paul, speaking of men's judgment, 1 Co. 4:3, calls it ἀδιποτὴν ἡμέραν, or the day of man, in opposition, as it should seem, to the day of the Lord. So 'Opinacionem commentis delet dies,' as in Cicero. And it has been observed, that a good rule to judge what portion of time may be designated by such indeterminate expressions, is to consider what is necessary or proportional to the season spoken of.

The day of the Lord? This expression is used in the Scriptures to signify a time of calamity and distress, when God pours out his judgments upon any nation or people as a punishment for their sins. See Jn. 2:11. Is. 2:12, &c.

In the New Testament it generally signifies the day of judgment, because God will then execute his final judgment upon all impenitent and ungodly sinners. See Jn. 5:6. Re. 6:17.

In Jb. 1:15, it signifies the time during which God suffered the locusts to infest the country of Judea; which produced the most dreadful scarcity, and turned the land into a barren wilderness. These locusts were accounted the most dreadful plague; insomuch that those who were instrumental to deliver any nation from them, were repaid with divine honors. Thus the Greeks named Hercules Cornuqam, from cornops, a locust, and worshipped him under that character, because he drove away the locusts from them. Chandler on Joc.

See more on DAY, under TIME.

'That day,' means that great day of the Lord, the day of judgment, as before mentioned. See Mat. 7:22. Lu. 10:12. 2 Th. 1:10. 2 Th. 1:18. 4:8. But in Jc. 10:25, the phrase seems to import the day of the destruction of the Jewish state.

DEATH is the destruction of the subject spoken of, according to its nature, even though it have no natural life; that is, in such a manner that it cannot any more act as such.

So in Ro. 7:8, 'Without the law sin is dead,' i. e. without the law sin does not exert its power. And on the other hand, as it is said there, v. 8, 'Sin revived and I died'; i. e. sin got strength to act, and I lost my power to resist; I was not the same man as before; sin destroyed my power.

So of a nation, Am. 2:2, 'Monah shall die with tumult,' — the meaning being, that the king and government thereof shall lose their power, and the nation be brought into subjection and slavery.

So Cicero, when banished, called himself dead, an image, and the like, lib. 1, ep. 3. ad. 2, Fr.

And so the ancient philosophers called vicious persons, unable through ill habits, to exert any virtuous act, dead men. Simpl. in Epict. p. 2.

On the contrary, to live is to be in a power to act, — acting and living being, says Attēndorus, l. 4. c. 42, analogical to each other.

And so in He. 4:21, ζῶν, quick or alive, signifies active or powerful — the word τρέψις, powerful, being joined to it, to show the meaning.

Death is finely personified in J. 9:21,

'For death hath climbed up through our windows;
It hath entered into our palaces;
It hath at once cut off the children from the street,
And destroyed the young men from the broad places.'

And in La. 1:20,

'Already a sword destroyeth, at home as it were death; meaning the pestilence — death, as it were, acting in propria persona; and not by the instrumentality of another, as when a person is slain by the sword. So our great poet in his description of a Lazar-house: —

'Despair
Tended the sick, baser from couch to couch;
And over them triumphant, Death his dart
Shook, but delayed to strike.' Par. Lost, b. 11, 489.

As the word death, when applied to the animal nature, properly signifies a dissolution or fusione of all its powers and functions; so, when applied to the spiritual nature, or souls of men, as Parkhurst observes, it denotes a correspondent disorder therein, a being cut off from a communication with the divine light and spirit, a being spiritually dead, dead in trespasses and sins. Compare Ep. 2:1, 3. Col. 2:13. Ro. 8:6. Ep. 5:14. Jn. 5:21. Jn. 25. Ju. 12.

The 'second death' Br. 2:11, is so called in respect to the natural or temporal, as coming after it, and implies everlasting punishment. Re. 2:18.

By a Hebraism, the plague or pestilence is sometimes called death; see Gratiot on Mat. 24:7; also Jn. 9:21, before quoted, and 18:21, and 1:52. It occurs also in Re. 6:8, with which compare Ez. 14:21. Re. 9:23. 18:8.

'Shadow of death.' This image (says Bayley on Jn. 2:6) was undoubtedly borrowed from those dusky caverns and holes among the rocks, which the Jews ordinarily chose for their burying-places, where Death seemed to hover continually, casting over them his broad shadows. Sometimes, indeed, I believe nothing more is intended by it than to denote a dreariness and gloom like that which reigns in those dismal mansions. But in other places it respects the perils and dangers of the situation. Thus, Ps. 23:4, 'Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil.' And again, Ps. 43:9. But in Jn. 2:6, over and above the foregoing allusions, 'the land of the shadow of death' seems to intend the grave itself, which the wilderness actually proved to all the individuals of the children of Israel that entered into it, Caleb and Joshua only excepted, whose lives were preserved by a special providence. See also

Jer. 13:16, and Is. 59:9,10, where the same images are employed.

DESERT, or WILDERNESS. A place remote from the society and commerce of men; the symbol of temptation, solitude, persecution, desolation, and the like.

Thus in Is. 27:10,

'The strongly-fortified city shall be desolate,
A habitation forsaken, and deserted as a wilderness.'

And in 33:9

'The land mourneth, it languisheth;
Lebanon is put to shame, it withereth;
Sharon is become like a desert;
Bashan and Carmel are stripped of their beauty.'

And thus Æneas, in Virgil, to show the misery of his condition, mentions his wandering unknown and needy in a wilderness, Æn. b. I., v. 388,

'Ipsa ignotus, egenus, Libyæ deserta pungit.'

But a wilderness may also be a symbol of good, when it denotes a hiding-place from enemies, as David often found it; and as the Israelites did in the persecution of Antiochus, when the Gentiles had profaned the sanctuary.

Deserts are sometimes emblematic of spiritual things, as in Is. 41:19,

'In the wilderness I will give the cedar,
The acacia, the myrtle, and the tree producing oil,
I will plant the fir-tree in the desert,
The pine and the box together.'

So in 32:5,

'Till the Spirit from on high be poured out upon us,
And the wilderness become a fruitful field,
And the fruitful field be esteemed a forest,
And judgment shall dwell in the wilderness,
And in the fruitful field shall reside righteousness ;'

meaning nations in which there was no knowledge of God, or of divine truth, shall be enlightened and made to produce fruit unto holiness.

Deserts are generally pathless. In reference to this Israhil says, 35:8,

'And a highway shall be there,
And it shall be called the way of holiness :
No man shall pass through it,
But He Himself shall be with them, walking in the way.'

He Himself, i.e. God, who shall dwell among them, and set them an example that they should follow his steps.

The desert is the symbol of the Jewish church and people; Is. 40:3;

'A voice crieth in the wilderness.'

The Jewish church, to which John was sent to announce the coming of Messiah, was at that time in a barren and desert condition, unfit without reformation for the reception of her King. See the whole of Lowth's note in loco. See also Ez. 47:8.

The desert seems also to be the symbol of the antichristian empire, Re. 17:3.

It was in the wilderness that John saw the vision of the woman clothed in purple; and since this woman denotes mystic Babylon, the wilderness may be understood to be the figure of her power.

It is of the conversion of the Gentiles the prophet speaks, when he says, Is. 35:1,

'The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them,

'The desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose.'

The solitude of the desert is a subject often referred to; thus Jb. 38:26,

'Who caused it to rain on the earth, where no man is,

'On the wilderness, wherein there is no man.'

Jer. 9:2,

'Oh that I had in the wilderness a traveller's lodge !

'That I might have my people, and go from them !'

By a traveller's lodge, meaning some cave or hut, which some one before him may have erected for a temporary shelter.

Homer describes the desert, as 'terræ domibus negantur' and elsewhere,

'Sive factoris iter per iherusalem Caucasum,'

and Properties, b. I., el. 10,

'Hoc certe deserta loca et tacitura querenti,

'Et vacuum zephyri p. assidet aura nuncus,

'Hic licet oculos proferat impune dolores ;'

that is, without any one's presence or knowledge.

The desert is the abode of evil spirits, or, at least, their occasional resort. See Mat. 12:43. Lu. 11:24. The heathen also held this opinion; witness Avian, fab. 29,

'Hinc nemorum custos fertur miseratus in astro

'Exceptum Satyrus continuisse suo ;'

and Virgil, Æn. 6, v. 27,

'Tum vero in numerum faunos ferasque videres

'Ludere,' &c.

The Shedim or demons of Scripture appear to have been the satyrs and fauns of the Gentiles, whom the Israelites idolatrously served. De. 32:17. Ps. 106:37. Shedim being derived from shed, to lay waste or desolate. See Is. 34:14, and Jer. 50:38,39. And Mammonides, speaking of the Zabians, says, 'They relate in their books, that on account of the wrath of Mars, desert and desolate places are without water and trees, and that horrid demons inhabit those places.'

SYMBOL DICTIONARY.

DEW

'Ye mountains of Gilboa,
On ye be neither dew nor rain,
Nor fields affording oblation ;'

i. e. let your fields henceforth produce nothing worthy to be offered to the Lord.

Dew, as consisting of innumerable drops, is sometimes the symbol of multitude. Thus,

Ps. 110:3,

'More than the dew from the womb of the morning
Shall be the dew of thy progeny ;'

meaning, that converts to the gospel of Christ should at some future period be very numerous, But it is right to notice, that Durell gives this passage a different sense. Thus,—

'I have brought thee forth out of the womb,
Before the morning brought on the dew ;'

i. e. God, addressing the Messiah, advertises to the existence of the latter long before the creation of any being.

Having examined the different versions minutely, with a view to ascertain the genuine meaning of this difficult passage, the following is the result, from which it appears that renderings similar to that of Dr. Durell preponderate; but they can scarcely be said to be warranted by the original.

Literal version of the Hebrew :

'More than the womb of the dawn,
The dew of thy progeny.'

The Septuagint :

'In the splendor of thy holiness from the womb,
Before the morning-star I begot thee.'

Vulgate : The same as the Septuagint.

Aquila :

'Thou hast the dew of thy youth
From the womb, from the morning.'

Symmachus :

'The youth is as the morning dew.'

Boethius :

'Thou hast alone like the morning; from thy very birth;
Thy youth has been covered with dew.'

Madge :

'Thy youth (meaning young men) shall be ready at thy hand,
As dew from the womb of the morning.'

Parkhurst :

'More than (the dew from) the womb of the dawn,
(Should be) the dew of thy progeny.'

So also Uccerus and Bishop Lowth.

Pye Smith :

'From the womb of the morning,
Thine shall be the dew of thy youth.'

Kennicott (on the authority of the Syriac and Arabic) :

'In majesty and holiness from the womb;
Before the morning-star, I have begotten thee.'

Le Cœe :

'You have alone like the dawn from your birth;
Your infancy has been covered with dew.'

When I said above, that renderings similar to Durell's preponderate, I meant not in point of number, but in point of value; since the Septuagint, the Vulgate, Syriac, Arabic, are of more importance than modern versions. But there seems to be something wanting in the Hebrew original, which it is now very difficult to supply. At present it conveys no meaning whatever.

In another place, dew is made the symbol of brotherly love and harmony; for though the drops are many, they sometimes run together and coalesce, as quicksilver is seen to do upon a smooth surface. Thus, Ps. 133:3,

'As the dew of Hermon,

That descended upon the mountains of Zion' (Sion); a passage which has greatly embarrassed critics, to account how the dew of Hermon could fall upon the mountains of Zion, in Jerusalem, at the distance of upwards of sixty miles. And hence our translators try to overcome the difficulty by inserting the words 'and as the dew'; and Durell renders it, 'Upon the dry hills,' for so he affirms the word Zion is used in Is. 25:5, and 32:2. Madge imagines that David, seeing the two summits at a distance, had joined them together in his description, without reference to the interval between them. But the best interpretation seems to be that of Dr. Stukeley, in his history of Abury, ch. 14, who corrects Zion into Sirion, as being a mistake of some transcriber; and this is justified by reference to De. 3:9, where Moses says, 'which Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion.' And this mode of parallel is very common in the poetical parts of Scripture.

The silent manner in which a man tries to overtake his enemy by stealth, is beautifully likened to the falling of the dew by Hushah, in 2 S. 17:12;—'So shall we come upon him in some place where he shall be found, and we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground.'

The comparison of God's visitation of his people to dew is remarkable in several passages. Thus, Is. 26:19,—

'They dead shall live ; my deceased, they shall rise ;

'Awake and sing, ye that dwell in the dust !'

For the dew is as the dew of the dawn,

But the earth shall cast forth, as an abortian, the deceased tyrants.' Louth's Version.

The prophet here speaks of the captivity of Babylon as of a state of death, and the deliverance of God's people from their depression is explained by images plainly taken from the resurrection of the dead, similar to what we find in Ez. ch. 37.

The residue of Jacob is beautifully compared to dew in Mt. 5:7—

'As the dew from Jehovah,
As the showers upon the grass,
Which tarry not for man,
Neither waiteth for the sons of men.'

The Jews, observes Newcome, contributed to spread the knowledge of the one true God during their captivity. See Da. 2:37; 3:29; 4:3; 6:26. The gospel was preached by them when the Messiah appeared, and it shall again be propagated by their future glorious restoration. Ro. 11:24, 15.

See a similar passage in Zech. 8:12—

'For the seed shall be prosperous;
The field shall yield its increase,
And the ground shall yield its increase,
And the heavens shall yield their dew,
And I will cause the residue of this people
To possess all these things.'

DOG. The symbol of uncleanness, immorality, apostasy; also of the Gentile tribes generally, whom the Jews despised, as being destitute of the true knowledge, worship, and obedience of God; as living in impurity, and being without the pale of the covenant.

The dog was declared to be unclean by the law of Moses, and the term 'dead dog' among the Jews was expressive of the utmost contempt. See 1 S. 24:14. 2 S. 9:8.

In De. 23:18, dog seems to be used for a person guilty of unnatural crimes. Such persons are called 'the abominable' in Re. 21:8, and their doom is there pronounced. Such as resemble them are excluded from the kingdom of heaven. Re. 22:15, where there is an allusion to the outer court of the Gentiles, who were not admitted into the holy place; — 'without are dogs.'

It has been objected to this view of De. 23:18, that legislators are not wont to use metaphorical expressions in the wording of their precepts—which is true; but the price of a dog being classed along with the hire of a prostitute, as being an odious offering at the altar of God, leads to prefer the figurative to the literal sense. There are great names on both sides, if names can determine any question. For the figurative, Le Clerc, Rosenmüller, Houbigant, Michaelis; for the literal, Bochart, Spenser, Ikemus, Geddes, Dathe. Herbelot quotes a passage from a Persian poet, in which Sodomitae are compared to dogs. The Turks reckoned on a dog an unclean and filthy creature, and therefore drove him from their houses. Dogs then belong to no particular owners, but live on the offals which are thrown abroad in the streets.

Solomon and Peter compare apostates to dogs returning to their vomit. See Pr. 26:11. 2 Pe. 2:22.

David, personating Christ, compares his enemies to dogs, as slandering and persecuting him: Ps. 22:16.

And Paul calls the false apostles dogs, on account of their impudence and love of gain: Phil. 3:2, 'beware of dogs.' 'Cave canem,' meaning rabiassum, was a proverb among the ancients.

Virgil uses the term 'obscenique canes,' in Geor. b. 1, v. 470.

But, in Lc. 5:10, the dog is used as the symbol of diligence and watchfulness; for, while as many creatures may be in their habits as animals, there are none that may not be considered as possessing some good qualities, as being of God's formation, and intended severally for wise purposes. As the barking of dogs is useful to give notice to man of the approach of strangers, so those watchmen mentioned by the prophet, meaning the ministers of religion of that day, when they ceased to warn the people, are compared to dogs who are dumb, and who cannot or do not bark, consequently who have lost their most useful property.

When our Lord says, in Mat. 15:26, 'It is not proper to take the children's bread and throw it to the dogs,' by the children he means the Jews, by the dogs the Gentiles. In the rabbinical writings, the question is put, 'What does a dog mean?' and the answer given is, 'One who is uncircumcised.'

The dog and the sow are mentioned together by Isaiah, 66:3; by Christ, in Mat. 7:6; and by Peter, 2 Pe. 2:22, as being alike impure and unacceptable. Horace also classes them together—

'Vixit canis immodicus, vel simia luto sa.'

DOOR is that which closes the light.

SYMBOL DICT. 3

The opening of any thing is said, when it may act suitably to its quality.

The shutting of any thing is the stopping of its use.

Therefore Paul, in 1 Co. 16:9; 2 Co. 2:12, Col. 4:3, uses the symbol of a door opened, to signify the free exercise and propagation of the gospel.

Thus in Pindar, Olymp. Od. 6, 'to open the gates of songs,' is to begin to sing freely.

And in Euripides, Hippol. v. 56, 'the gates of hell opened,' signify death ready to seize upon a man, and to exert its power.

And thus in the Ottoman empire, according to Sir Paul Rycaut, when a call or new levy of Janizaries is made, it is said to be 'the opening of a door for Janizaries,' an expression very much like that in Ac. 14:27, of God's having 'opened a door of faith for the Gentiles.'

Jn. 10:9, our Lord applies the term to himself—'I am the door,' on which see Campbell's note on Jn. 10:8.

In Hos. 2:15, the valley of Acher is called 'a door of hope,' because there, immediately after the execution of Achæus, God said to Joshua, 'Fear not, neither be dismayed,' &c., and promised to support him against Ai, her king, and people. And from that time Joshua drove on his conquests with uninterrupted success. See Horsley on the passage.

DOVE. The symbol of purity and innocence.

Jesus recommends to his disciples the caution of the serpent and the harmlessness of the dove, Mat. 10:16. It has been justly observed, that He does not recommend these qualities separately, but conjointly, that the one may supply what is lacking in the other, or correct what is lacking of the other; for prudence or caution separately may degenerate into mischievous cunning, and simplicity into silliness. Our poet Cowper has well expressed it:

'That thou must injure no one, dove-like be,
And serpent-like, that none may injure thee.'

And Paul has given the same advice in another form, Ro. 15:19, 'I wish you indeed to be wise in which is good, and pure in respect to evil.'

So Martial, b. 10, Epigr. 47,

'Prudens simplicitas, parca amici,
Sicut columba.'

The kings of Assyria are said to have used the dove as an emblem. See Ramire de Prado, who says they had it painted on their standards, banners, and public edifices, as the ensign of their empire. Hence we find in Hos. 11:11, in allusion to the return of the ten tribes, 'They shall hasten as a bird from Egypt, And as a dove from the land of Assyria.'

And in 7:11,

'Ephraim is as a simple dove without knowledge; Upon Egypt they call; to Assyria they resort.'

Semiramis is said by Diodorus Siculus, b. 3, c. 4, to have had her name in the Syriac language ātō rōv πτεραπέρων, from the dove.

From the title of Ps. 50, which is addressed to the dove of the distant groves,³ and seems to have been composed by David when flying from Saul, or some similar enemy, as from a hawk, we may conjecture that the dove was an emblem also of the Israelitish kings, especially as we learn from some of the Jewish writers, quoted by Lightfoot, v. ii., 'That when Solomon sat on his throne, there was appended to it a sceptre, on whose top was a dove, and a golden crown in the mouth of the dove.' Probably the emblem was borrowed from the history of Noah and his dove with the olive of peace, and might be intended to denote a pacific reign.

That the dove is a very timid bird, is well known, and is in part alluded to in Hos. 11:11, and Ez. 7:16, where the Vulgate renders the Hebrew comme trépida, 'all of them trembling.' The profane writers notice this quality, Thus Ovid, as quoted by Parkhurst:

'Si dild ille fœ, si dild hi patrus,
As flew the fearful dove with trembling wing,
And as the falcon caput patrus.'

And Homer, II. 22, line 130, &c.,

'Thus at the panting dove a falcon flies,
(The swift career of the liquid skies.)
Just as he holds or thinks he holds his prey,
Obliquely wheeling through the aerial way;
With open beak and shrilling cries he springs,
And aims his claws, and seizes upon his wings.'
Pope.

So Virgil, En. 11, line 721, &c.

'Not with more ease the falcon, from above,
Shows, seizing, graps, and rends the trembling dove;
All studded with blood the beauteous feathers fly,
And the loose plumes come fluttering down the sky.'

Piæ.

The dove is also the symbol of rest. It was a bird of this kind that brought the tidings to Noah of the retiring of the waters, Ge. 8:11.

Propertius has a similar notice, b. 2—

'Dux erat ignota misa columba mari,

Illæ meis tantum non unquam desit ocellis.'

i.e. a dove was sent forth as a guide in the unknown seas, and she was never absent from my eyes.

Apolodorus also says, 'In the Argonautic expedition, a dove was sent out from the ship among the rocks called Symplegades, in order to determine, by her fate, whether they might be safely passed.' Lib. I. fol. 32.

The Psalmist says, Ps. 55:9,

'O that I had wings like a dove.'

Seneca, in his Agamemnon, has a similar expression:

'Quæ lacrymæ nostri quæstus
Udidit Aeon! et cæpsa fiducia!

The cooing of the dove, when solitary, is often alluded to in Scripture, as in Is. 32:14-59; 11, Na. 2:7.

That the dove is a proper emblem of the Holy Spirit, is generally admitted, it being in that form, doce, that the Spirit descended on Christ at his baptism, Mat. 3:16. Some have thought that there is an allusion to this emblem in Ge. 1:2, 'And the Spirit of God brooded (like a bird or dove) over the waters.' The olive of peace brought back by the dove of Noah, has also led to a supposed prefiguration of the same kind. It is to Noah's dove, no doubt, that Plutarch refers, in his treatise on the instinct or craft of animals: 'The mythologists tell us, that the dove which Deucalion sent out of his ark, when she returned to him again, was a sure sign that the storm had not ceased,—but of serene weather, when she flew quite away.'

'The Holy Ghost,' says Archbishop Leighton, 'descended upon the apostles in the shape of fire. There was something to be purged in them; they are to be quickened and enabled by it for their calling. But in Him, as a dove, there was no need of cleansing or purging out any thing. That was a symbol of the spotless purity of his nature, and of the fulness of the Spirit dwelling in Him.' Is. 60:8;

'Who are these that fly as a cloud,
And as doves to their windows?'

where the Chaldee renders, 'as doves who return to their dove-cots.' Pliny, in his Natural History, remarks, 'Solent columbaria imprimit ad notos nidos et columbaria, quamlibet in remota loca transvecta, pernici volatu remaneant.' Wherefore a dove was often sent forth as a sign and omen of future return, when the emperors went to war, as the scholiast on Apollon. b. 2, Argon., informs us. And Ovid has this expression:

'Aspice ut redire ad candida tecta columba.'

But Ep. Louth translates the text in Isaiah thus:

'And as doves upon the wing;'

for which he assigns his reasons. See his note on the place.

The dove was ordained as an offering under the Old Testament, Le. 12:6,8. It was worshipped among the Assyrians and Samaritans. See Lucian de Dea Syr. p. 795.—'Of birds, the dove appears to them the most tame, and they account it unlawful even to touch it.' And Hyginus says, 'On this account the Syrians do not eat fishes and doves, which they reckoned among the number of their gods.' That doves were much used among the Jewish sacrificers, appears from Mat. 21:12—'the seats of them that sold doves.' See also Mk. 11:15; Jn. 2:14,16. That they were offered among the Gentile sacrifices, is plain from ancient authors. Thus Ovid, Fasti, b. 1,

'Ergo ariæ suo conjux abducta marito
Utror in calidis alio columba focis.'

And Propertius, b. 4, Eleg. 5, in fine.

The dove was worshipped among the Assyrians, as some think, in honor of Semiramis; but others suppose, as an emblem of the air; and hence Hesychius considers it to be the hieroglyphic of a person of exalted mind, and who adds himself to divine contemplations. Virgil says,

'Briditer Equilum, celere neque commovet alas.'

And Tibullus,

'Quid referat ut volvet crebras intacta per urbes
Alba Palatino sancta Columba Syro?'

The dove was viewed as the emblem of meekness and simplicity; hence, when David was affected with a desire to fly, he wished for the wings, not of the eagle or the hawk, though stronger and more impetuous, but of the dove, for then he should flee away, and be at rest.

It was also considered to be the harbinger of happier times; and in that respect the symbol of future felicity, when the season of divine wrath shall have passed away, and men shall enjoy rest in the favor of God, as Noah's dove was the messenger of the cessation of the deluge, and the return of serene skies and subsiding waters.

DRUNK. Drunkenness is sometimes the symbol of folly, and of the madness of sinners, who, making no use of their reason, involve themselves in all sorts of crimes.

Se Philo explains it.

And so it is taken in Is. 28:13, and by Artemidorus, in b. 3, c. 42.

And then, as punishment is the consequence of sin, so drunkenness, in the prophets, is taken for that stupidity which arises from God's judgments; when the sinner is under the consternation of his misery, as one astonished, staggering, and not knowing what to do,—and is therefore the symbol of a very miserable state.

Thus in Jb. 12:25,

'They grope in the dark without light,
And he maketh them to stagger like a drunken man.'

In Is. 29:9,

'They are drunken, but not with wine;
They stagger, but not with strong drink.'

See also Is. 51:21,22, and Lowth's note on Is. 1:22.

Jer. 13:13,14,

I will fill all the inhabitants of this land,
And all kings that at David's stead on his throne,
And the wise, and the prudent;
And all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, with drunkenness;
And I will dash them one against another, saith Jehovah.'

Here the prophet is directed to deal plainly with them, and to tell them that the wine he meant was not such as would exhilarate, but such as would intoxicate; being no other than what would be poured out of the wine-cup of God's fury to the subversion of all ranks and orders of men amongst them. Compare 25:15-29, and La. 3:15.

Aristotle says, the drunk are doubly punished. Eth. b. 3, c. 5. Sometimes idolatry is set forth under the symbol of drunkenness, as being attended therewith. See Jer. 51:7.

And sometimes drunkenness is used in a good sense, for being replenished or satisfied with good things, as in Jer. 31:14, according to the original.

And so the Oneirocritics sometimes, as in c. 111, 112, explain it of the acquisition of riches. See under CUR and WINE.

Hos. 7:5;

'On the feast-day of our king, when the princes began to be hot with wine,
He stretched out his hand with the scorner.'

The following is the comment of Tarnovius on this passage:—'Tum morbo afficiunt seipso principes calore ex viro, vaporibus calidis caput occupantibus, unde cephalgia, qui morbus chrietum conitatur, quin etiam febris ardenter sepe contrahunt potores ex omni vino, quo incalescunt.'

Is. 5:11,

'Woe to them who rise early in the morning, to follow strong drink;

'Who sit late in the evening, that wine may inflame them.'

Comp. Am. 6:3-6.

DUST. The symbol of rejection.

Mat. 10:14, 'Shake off the dust from your feet,' i. e. says Origen, 'Show them that the very dust which you have collected in a journey undertaken on their account, shall be a witness against them in the day of judgment, because they were unwilling to receive you, or to hear your discourses.'

That the apostles literally observed this injunction of their Master appears from Ac. 13:51, in the case of Antioch in Pisidia.

'Men would not,' says Baxter, 'triumph in their own calamity, when they have expelled their faithful teachers, (the dust of whose feet, the sweat of their brows, the tears of their eyes, and the fervent prayers and groans of their hearts, must witness against them,) if they knew themselves.'

It was maintained by the scribes, that the very dust of a heathen country polluted their land, and therefore ought not to be brought into it. Our Lord here, adopting their language, requires his disciples, by this action, to signify that those Jewish cities which rejected their doctrine, deserved a regard no way superior to that which they themselves showed to the cities of pagans. See Campbell's note in loc.

When the Jews, Ac. 22:23, in the height of their rage, threw dust into the air, it showed that these outrageous people would have reduced the apostle to powder, if they durst. Comp. 2 S. 16:13; and see Harmer, b. 4, p. 202.

Dust is the symbol of a low condition.

1 S. 2:8,

'God raiseth up the poor out of the dust,

To set them among princes.'

Na. 3:18, 'Thy nobles shall dwell in the dust.'

But the proper rendering here seems to be, dwell in slush.

'Quiescent, decumbent, dormant.'

See Newcome's note.

1 K. 15:2, 'I raised thee out of the dust,' &c.

Is. 47:1, 'Descent and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon.'

Sitting on the ground was a posture that denoted mourning and deep distress. Jeremiah has the same image in La. 2:8,

'The elders of the daughter of Zion sit on the ground; they have cast up dust on their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth; the virgins of Jerusalem have bowed down their heads to the ground.'

Judea is represented in this posture on ancient coins. See Addison on Medals.

The Persians have a proverb, when they would express the lowest humility, 'I am the dust of your feet.'

Dust is the symbol of human frailty and mortality.

Ge. 3:19, 'Dust thou art, and to dust thou shalt return.'

Jb. 7:21, 'For now shall I sleep in the dust.'

Ps. 22:13, 'Thou hast brought me to the dust of death.'

Rightly, therefore, does the Psalmist observe, Ps. 103:14,

'He knoweth our frame,
He remembreth that we are dust.'

Comp. Ec. 3:20, Jb. 10:9, Sirach 17:31.

Hence also we find profane writers using such expressions: thus Horace, b. 4, Od. 7,

'Pulvis et sonum sumus.'

Quis sit an adiutor, adiutor crastina summe

Tempora Di super?

And Phocylides, 'For we have a body formed from the earth, and are all resolved into it again. We are dust, κύρις ἐπίνειον.'

Dust is the symbol of sorrow and mourning.

The messenger who announced Saul's death had dust upon his head. 2 S. 1:2.

The friends of Job had the same tokens, Jb. 2:12; and the elders of Israel, Jos. 7:6. See many other passages.

The same custom obtained among the heathen, as in Homer's Odyssey, 24, v. 315,

'Deep from his soul he sighed, and, sorrowing, spread

A cloud of ashes on his hoary head.'

And Catullus,

'Primum multas expromam mente querelas,

Cautio te tra re aqua infuso pulvere turpans.'

And Statius, Theb. b. 3,

'Canitio impaxi dira tellure volatans.'

Dust is used to denote multitude: thus, Ge. 13:16, 'I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth.' Nu. 23:10, 'Who can count the dust of Jacob?' Ps. 78:27, 'He rained flesh also upon them as dust.'

DWELL. To dwell over—to give rest and protection. See Nu. 9:18,22, Is. 4:6,18,21,25,26, 30:2. Du. 4:12.

And the Indian Interpreter, c. 202.

To dwell among, Re. 7:15, 21:3, signifies also protection, but in a more remarkable manner; the foregoing expression signifying protection, by any instrument that effects it; but this, protection by the familiar converse and perpetual presence of the worker.

Ep. 3:17, 'That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith.' Paul here compares the minds of the Ephesian Christians to a temple, in allusion to the celebrated temple of Diana at Ephesus, which had an image of her, fabulously reported to have fallen from heaven, constantly dwelling in it. He prays that they might possess a more substantial blessing, viz.

'That Christ might dwell in them, not personally, but by faith,' i. e. by the principles of his religion, heartily and firmly believed by them. See Chandler's excellent note on the passage.

The word of Christ is said to dwell in a person richly in all wisdom, Col. 3:16; when, as Cruden well observes, it is diligently studied, firmly believed, and carefully practised.

On this text Lowman observes: 'To bear on eagles' wings is an allusion to the strength and swiftness of an eagle's flight, and well expresses the readiness and power with which God often delivers the church out of its dangers.

But whether the two wings of an eagle are here put to signify the eastern and western parts of the Roman empire, of which an eagle is the armorial ensign, is left to the reader's judgment.'

See more under CARRASS.

Is. 46:11, 'Calling from the East the eagle.'

A very proper emblem for Cyrus, as in other respects, so particularly because the ensign of Cyrus was a golden eagle, αρτος νερον, as Xenophon mentions, Cyrop. b. 7, sub int. See Lowth in loc. Cyrus came from the East, and claimed to himself the prey of many nations.

EARTH is the symbol of a people in a state of peace, quietness, and submission, and, at the same time, involved in idolatry or apostasy.

The reasons are,

1. In the symbolical language, the natural world represents the political. The heavens, sun, and luminaries, represent the governing part; and, consequently, the earth must represent the part governed, submitting and inferior.

2. The sea is frequently used to denote men in war and tumult; and therefore earth may signify men in a state of peace.

3. It is the usual style of the Scriptures to represent such men as are sinners, idolaters, out of the covenant of grace, or at least apostates from it, by the names of earth, inhabitants of the earth, and the like, as in Ge. 11:1. 'All the earth' signifies all men living there, who had begun to apostatize. Whereas all good men, who have their conversation or citizenship in heaven, are, for the most part, styled saints, servants of God, prophets, martyrs, and the like.

Mat. 5:5, 'The meek shall inherit the earth.' Comp. Ps. 37:11, 29.

Moses had his land of promise, with the prospect of which he roused the Israelites. Jesus Christ also has his, with the hope of which He encourages and stimulates his disciples. That it is the heavenly happiness that is here meant, appears certain, (for all the promises here relate to things spiritual and eternal,) but still conveyed under those typical expressions, to which his hearers had been habituated. See Campbell's note on the place.

Vitrinus considers the earth in another point of view. He supposes the earth to be put in opposition to the sea — the former as producing fruit; the latter as barren. Under this aspect, he considers the earth to represent the church, and the sea to denote paganism. And he understands the vision in Rev. 13:1, 11, in this sense: The beast that rises up out of the sea, comes from paganism; the other that comes up out of the earth, is from the lands inhabited by Christians, or what is termed Christendom.

But Lowman interprets the 'rising out of the sea' to mean, that it should owe its original to the commotions of the people; for so waters are interpreted by the angel, 17:15. The second beast which rose up out of the earth, is understood by Sir Isaac Newton to be the church of the Greek empire, for it had two horns like those of a lamb, and therefore was a church; and it spoke as the dragon, and therefore was of his religion; and it came out of the earth, and by consequence in his kingdom.

EARTHQUAKES. Though the Greek word seisōn is usually translated an earthquake, it literally signifies a shaking, and is often used for any violent agitation or change, whether in the heavens or the earth. See Jo. 2:10, Hag. 2:21, He. 12:25. Min. Nat. Hist. b. 2, c. 73, &c. 52.

An earthquake, when great, overthrows and changes the surface of the earth, overturning mountains, hills, and rocks, sinking some parts, elevating others, altering the course of rivers, making ponds and lakes on dry lands, and drying up those that already existed; and is therefore a proper symbol of great revolutions or changes in the government or political world.

It is thus used in the prophets above quoted, and in Jer. 4:23, 24, &c. And to the same purpose it is explained by Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 46; and by the Oriental interpreters, c. 144, who there also explain it of a change in the state, occasioned by new laws.

There are only three literal earthquakes mentioned in Scripture; namely, that mentioned 1 K. 19:11; that in Uzziah's time, mentioned in Am. 1:1, Zch. 4:5, and also by Josephus, who speaks of it as being very violent. The third was that which took place at our Savior's death, Mat. 27:51.

Every other earthquake spoken of in the Old Testament, and some of those predicted in the New, may be considered as symbolical merely, representing great political commotions and revolutions of empires.

Take, for instance, that in Jo. 2:16, 'The heavens and the earth shall shake.' The prophet, having said that the Lord shall rule over Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem, continues the metaphor. As a lion, when he roars, makes the woods or plains to resound, and the beasts of the field to tremble; so God being here compared to this fierce animal, his voice is justly said to make the very heavens and earth shake; the plain meaning of which is, all should be put into the utmost consternation and distress, like a man seeing a roaring lion coming on him to devour him; or as if he saw the very heavens and earth themselves moving; and in the utmost disorder. All this, says Kimchi, is by way of similitude. No one is so ignorant, says Maimonides (More Nov.) as not to additio[n] to the letter of parables, as to imagine any change in the heavens, or that the earth was moved from its centre when Babylon was destroyed. No; such expressions represent only the state and condition of the conquered, to whom light is darkness, sweet bitter; to whom the earth seems too narrow, and the heavens to threaten him with ruins.

In Hag. 2:6, 7, there is a well-known prophecy to this effect:

'For thus saith Jehovah, God of hosts,
Yet once more, in a short time,
I will shake the earth and the earth,
And the sea and the dry land;
And I will shake all the nations,
And the Desire of all nations shall come.'

This is quoted in the Epistle to the Hebrews, 12:26, thus:

'Yet once more I shake not the earth only,' i.e., the heathen idolatry, and the power which support it —

'But also the heaven's,' i.e., the Mosaic worship and the Jewish state.

It was said above that only three literal earthquakes are recorded in Scripture. Tathese, on recollection, a fourth must be added, namely, that at the giving of the Law on Sinai. For we are told, Ex. 19:18, that 'the whole mount quaked greatly,' before God spake the ten commandments.

It is added to the passage in He. 12, (see verse 27,) that this expression, 'yet once,' denotes the removal or abolition of the things shaken, as of things that were made, i.e., were of an inferior and imperfect nature; that those which were not to be shaken, namely, the gospel church and worship, may remain; which is, in other words, to say, that the Christian dispensation shall be permanent, and shall never be supplanted by any other.

The destruction of Sennacherib's army is described by Isaiah as accompanied 'With thunder, and earthquakes, and a mighty voice.'

With storm, and tempest, and flame of devouring fire. But these images, as Lowth observes, are more adapted to show the greatness, suddenness, and horror of the event, than the means and manner by which it was effected.

There is a sublime passage in Is. 24:19, &c., where the destruction of the ecclesiastical and civil polity of the Jews is described under the image of an earthquake. I adopt Lowth's version of the passage.

'The land is grievously shaken;
The land is utterly shattered to pieces;
The land is violently moved out of her place;
The land reareth to and fro like a drunkard,
And roareth this way and that, like a lodge for the night,
For her mighty hosts lie upon her;
And she shall fall and rise no more.'

the best comment upon which is that furnished by Sir Isaac Newton, in his Observations on the Prophecies, part I, chap. 2, where he says, 'The figurative language of the prophets is taken from the analogy between the world natural, and an empire or kingdom considered as a world politic. Accordingly, the whole world natural, consisting of heaven and earth, signifies the whole world politic, consisting of thrones and people, or so much of it as is considered in prophecy; and the things in that world signify the analogous things in this. For the heavens and the things therein signify thrones and dignities, and those who enjoy them; and the earth, with the things thereon, the inferior people; and the lowest parts of the earth, called hades, or hell, the lowest or most miserable part of them. Great earthquakes, and the shaking of heaven and earth, are put for the shaking of kingdoms, so as to distract and overthrow them; the creating a new heaven and earth, and the passing away of an old one, or the beginning and end of a world, for the rise and ruin of a body politic, signified thereby; the sun, for the whole species and race of kings in the kingdom of the world politic; the moon, for the body of the common people, considered as the king's wife; the stars, for subordinate princes and great men, or for the bishops and rulers of the people of God, when the sun is Christ; setting of the sun, moon, and stars, darkening the sun, turning the moon into blood, and falling of the stars, for the ceasing of a kingdom.'

Am. 4:12,
'He that maketh the morning darkness,
And spreadeth over the high places of the earth,
Jehovah, God of hosts, is his name.'

Noycome supposes, that both here and in 5:8, there is an allusion to the black clouds and smoke attending earthquakes which happen during the day: 'Des nuages noirs et épais, (says a French writer,) sont ordinairement les avant-courreurs de ces funestes catastrophes. On va sortir une flamme de terre dans ces tremblements, mais plus souvent de la fumée.'

Am. 8:9,
'Shall not the land be shaken for this?'

'And shall not all mourn that dwell therein?'

'And shall not all of it rise up as the river,
And be driven out of its place, and sink down, as the river of Egypt?'

'And shall not the sun in pass in that day,
With the Lord Jehovah?

'That I will cause the sun to go down at noon;
And will darken the land in the bright day.'

The rising and falling of the ground with a wave-like motion, and its having its proper place and bounds on occasion of an earthquake, are justly and beautifully compared to the swelling, the overflowing, and the subsiding of the Nile: 'Le mouvement qu'elles impriment à la terre est tantôt une espèce d'undulation semblable à celle de vagues.' See Newcome.

Jo. 2:10,
'Before them (i.e. the locusts) the earth quaketh, the heavens tremble.'

'The sun and the moon are darkened,
And the stars withdraw their shining.'

Kimchi says, that all these expressions are only by way of similitude, to denote the greatness of the affliction experienced, according to the usual custom of Scripture. And Jerome tells us we are not to imagine that the heavens actually moved, or the earth shook, but that these things seemed to be so, through the greatness of affliction and terror.

When the prophet, however, adds, 'The sun and the moon are darkened,' it might literally be so, as Bechart has brought many instances to prove, and Chandler has quoted one in particular, that happened in Germany in the year 873, of which it is reported, that during the space of two whole months, the locusts by their flight often obscured the rays of the sun for the space of one whole mile. Pliny also, in his Natural History, b. 11, c. 29, observes, 'That they darken the sun so that the people look towards them, greatly afraid lest they should cover over their lands.'

Re. 6:12, 'And lo, there was a great earthquake,' — A political earthquake, no doubt, although about the time supposed to be alluded to, namely, about A. D. 315, the prediction was fulfilled literally, in that stupendous earthquake described by Ammianus Marcellinus, b. 26, c. 14 — 'Horribilis trémores per omnem orbis ambitum, grassati sunt subito, quales nec fabula nec veridus nobis antiquitatis exponunt. Paulus post lucis exortum densitate pravia fulgurum terrae atris viuuntoribus stabilitas ponderis,' &c.

For an earthquake, as Mede observes, implies not a destruction, but an extraordinary alteration of the face of things, — as an earthquake changes the position of the earth's surface, by exalting valleys and depressing hills, turning the channels and courses of rivers, and such like. And was there not here the whole political government as well as religion altered, the imperial seat removed, the distribution of provinces, offices, &c. new moulded? And if the Roman deities are meant by the stars and mountains, mentioned ver. 13 and 14, we need go no farther for an exposition of this earthquake, and the shock it caused in the world. See Re. 11:13, and Lowman's paraphrase and notes on the passage; see also ver. 19 of the same chapter.

That earthquakes were sometimes considered as symbolical among the heathen, appears from Justin, b. 30, c. 4 — 'In the same year there was an earthquake between the islands of Thera and Therasia, where, to the amazement of navigators, there suddenly arose from the deep an island with hot waters. And in Asia, on the same day, the same earthquake shattered Rhodes and many other cities with a terrible ruin, and swallowed up some entirely. At which prodigy all being alarmed, the soothsayers gave out, "that the rising empire of the Romans would swallow up the ancient arc of the Greeks and Mardonians."

EAT. To eat, in the symbolical language, signifies to meditate and to digest divine truths. The metaphor is a very obvious one. As food nourishes the animal frame, so truth and knowledge are the nutriment of the soul. 'The words were found,' says Jeremiah, (15:16,) 'and I did eat them; and thy message was to me the joy and delight of my heart.' 'Son of man,' says the divine voice to Ezekiel, (3:1,) 'eat that which thou findest; eat this roll, and go, speak unto the house of Israel.' Our blessed Lord uses the same expression several times in the fifth chapter of John's Gospel, when He speaks of Himself as the bread of life. And in Re. 10:9, the angel says to John, 'Take the little book, and eat it up; i.e. consider it carefully, and digest it well, and thou shalt find, in the events it shall reveal to thee, matter of comfort and joy, of grief and sorrow.'

Hence, in Jos. 1:12, it is said, 'This book of the law shall not depart out of thy mouth, but thou shalt meditate therein day and night.' And hence the frequent expressions of the Psalmist, about the meditation of God's law. Ps. 119:39,

'Thy testimonies are my meditation;
and verse 103,

'How sweet are thy words to my taste!'
Yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth.'

And Philo calls eating the symbol of spiritual nourishment; the soul being nourished by the reception of truth and the practice of virtue.

Plautus says, 'I eat your discourse with a vast deal of pleasure;' and 'that is meat to me which you tell me.' And so to taste, signifies to make trial of any thing, as in the same writer, 'I had a mind to taste his discourse.' And many other examples may be found in Greek authors. So we say sometimes, I devoured your letter with avidity; meaning, I read it with the greatest satisfaction.

In the oneirologies, to eat, signifies constantly to turn something to one's profit.

Eating, when it comes under the notion of devouring, signifies destruction in any form, or taking from others, according as the decorum of the adjunct symbols requires, as in De. 32:42, 2 S. 2:26; Jer. 51:44. The same metaphor occurs in the Greek and Latin authors.

'I have meat to eat which ye know not of,' Jn. 4:32; i. e. I have engagements which I prefer before bodily refreshment, viz. to bring these Samaritans to the knowledge of the truth. Ho. 4:8,

'They eat the sin-offerings of my people, And they set their heart on their iniquity;'

meaning, they gladly partake of the daily sacrifices, without any attempts to reclaim the people from the sins which occasion them. Lc. 6:26.

ECLIPSES. The same may be affirmed of eclipses of the heavenly bodies, as was said of earthquakes, (see under EARTHQUAKE,) that they are seldom to be understood literally, but rather as symbolically denoting great political events. 'Great public calamities are described in the prophets,' (says Bossuet,) 'as if the order of nature was overturned — the earthquakes, the sun and moon are darkened, and the stars fall from heaven.' There is no need to understand such expressions of real earthquakes and eclipses; the prophetic style plainly shows they are figurative expressions, describing great calamities and changes, which the judgments of God would bring upon the earth. Thus the prophet Isaiah, predicting a great destruction of God's enemies, for their opposition to his church, which he calls 'the day of the Lord's vengeance,' describes it in these terms, 34:4 —

'And all the host of heaven shall waste away,
And the heavens shall be rolled up like a scroll;
And all their host shall wither,
As the withered leaf fallen from the vine,
And as the blighted fruit from the fig-tree.'

The general meaning of which expressions is explained in the following verse —

'For my sword is made bare in the heavens;
Behold, on Edom I shall descend,
And on the people justly by me devoted to destruction.'

The same prophet thus writes in 13:10, 'Yes, the stars of heaven, and the constellations thereof, Shall not send forth their light; The sun is darkened at his going forth, And the moon stays not cause her light to shine.'

On which see Lowth's judicious note. See also Jo. 2:10, Am. 8:9, Mat. 24:29, and other places.

Jo. 3:4,

'The sun shall be turned into darkness,
And the moon into blood.'

Ahen Ezra expounds the words literally of the eclipses of the sun and moon, which, he says, are the signs of great wars. Maimonides, on the other hand, understands it by way of similitude, denoting the great calamities and distress of the times spoken of. Sir Isaac Newton says, that these signs denote the ceasing of a kingdom, or the desolation thereof. But that this is not always the case, appears from Jo. 2:10. Sometimes the case is literally true in great wars, by reason of columns of smoke ascending from the burning cities, which darken the sun, and discolor the moon, or make it appear red and bloody, fire and smoke having that effect.

EGYPT. Re. 11:8, 'which spiritually is called Sodom and Egypt.'

The great city here mentioned, is that which reigns over the kings of the earth, or Rome, the empress of the world, and is compared to Egypt, on account of its tyranny, persecution, cruelty, pride, impenitence, and idolatry.

It is literally true, that our Lord was crucified there, since He was crucified by a Roman governor, who derived his power from Rome, and Judea was then within the bounds of the empire. He was afterwards crucified there in his servants, the apostles and others, to whom whatever is done, He imputes as done to Himself.

EYES, on account of their light and use, are the symbols of government and justice. Thus the sun is called the eye of the world, as governing or enlightening it under God.

The sun is called the eye of the sky, by Aristophanes.

The moon, the eye of the evening, by Pindar, and the eye of the night, by Aeschylus.

According to the Egyptian hieroglyphics, the eye is the observer of justice, and the keeper of the whole body.

Artemidorus calls the eyes the leaders and rulers of the body.

And our Savior says, 'The lamp of the body is the eye.' Mat. 11:22.

According to the Indian Interpreter, the eyes are the symbols of firmness, glory, and knowledge.

On these accounts the angels of the Lord are called his eyes, Zch. 4:10, as being the executioners of His judgments, and watching and attending for His glory. See Mede's remarkable discourse upon this text, — and compare under SEVEN.

In imitation of this, the favorites and prime ministers of state in the Persian monarchy were called the king's eyes, according to the Oriental customs and notions.

So in Nu. 10:31, 'to be instead of eyes,' is equal to being a prince, to guide and rule the people.

In Pindar, Olym. 2, the eye of Sicily is given as a title to one of the chief men in Sicily, showing his power. And thus also, in the same, 'the eye of the army,' stands for a good commander.

In Ho. 11:12, 'the eyes of the Lord' signify the divine providence.

In Jb. 24:25, 'the eye of the adulterer,' is his lascivious desire.

'Is thine eye evil, because I am good?' Mat. 20:15; i. e. art thou envious against thy brother, because I choose to show kindness to him?

Pr. 22:9, 'a bountiful eye,' — one that is liberal to the poor.

Da. 7:8, 'Eyes like the eyes of a man,' may signify the desires, designs, and behavior of a man; i. e. of a common or mean man.

Ez. 24:16, 'the desire of the eyes,' i. e. our great joy and delight. Euripides has 'the eye of life,' for the pleasure of life.

Eyes, as a flame of fire. See under FIRE.

F.

FACE. It is a singular privilege which is spoken of, Re. 22:4, as being granted to the servants of God, 'that they shall see his face.'

The term in Greek, προσωπός, agrees with the Hebrew פָּנִים, and is used not only of animate and inanimate beings, but in an allegorical sense of God Himself, who is an infinite Spirit.

When therefore it is ascribed to Him, it is to be explained προσωπίσθαι, in a manner becoming the Deity. It is very often so ascribed in Scripture; see Ge. 4:1, 32:30, Pv. 33:20, Jb. 2:7, Ps. 44:4, 119:28, 110:11, &c., &c. But 'to see the face of God,' is a metaphor borrowed from the custom of Eastern kings, who sat on lofty thrones glittering with gold and diamonds, and manifested their majesty only to those ministers of theirs who were placed around their throne and in their presence, like Solomon's of old, I K. 10:3; and since now, for most part, represent to themselves the Supreme Being in a human form, hence, to be admitted into His immediate presence is called 'seeing his face.' The Gentiles always assigned to their deities the human figure. Hence the people of Lystra, Ac. 13:11, exclaimed, 'The gods are come down to us in the likeness of men.' And Diodorus, b. 1, c. 12, says of Jupiter, Vulcan, Ceres, and Ocean, 'that they travel over the world, and appear to men sometimes in the shape of sacred animals, at other times in the human form.' And since the appearances of angels in Old Testament times were generally of this description, (see Jos. 5:13, and other passages,) it became natural to transfer, in the imagination of the beholder, the form of the messenger to Him who sent him.

The face of God in Scripture denotes every thing by which God is wont to manifest Himself to men. Thus:

Ge. 3:8, 'Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence (face) of Jehovah God among the trees of the garden.'

Pv. 13:7, 8,

'Whither shall I go from thy Spirit?
Whither shall I flee from thy presence (face)?
If I climb up into heaven, thou art; &
If I should make the grave my bed, behold thou art there.'

Ex. 33:20, 'Thou canst not see my face; no man can see my face and live,' i. e. see my glory perfectly, while in the present sinful state. But after this mortal hath put on immortality, it shall be otherwise. I Jn. 3:2, I Co. 13:12.

Ge. 32:30, 'And Jacob called the name of the place Face (the face of God); for I have seen God face to face, and my life is preserved,' i. e. I have seen Him in a manifest manner, when compared with dreams and visions.

I Co. 42:2,

'My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God;
When shall I come and see the face of God?' i. e. when shall he, on solemn days, pay his devotions at the sanctuary?

The presence of Jehovah, Ex. 33:14:15; and the angel, Ex. 23:20, 21, is Jehovah Himself; but in Is. 63:9, an angel of his presence is opposed to Jehovah Himself. Thus, in Lowth's version:

'It was not an envy, nor an angel of his presence, that saved them;

Through his love and his indulgence, He Himself redeemed them;

And He took them up, and He bare them, all the days of old.'

After their idolatrous worshipping of the golden calf, when God had said to Moses, 'I will send an angel before thee, I will not go in the midst of thee,' the people mourned.

God afterwards comforts Moses, by saying,

'My presence (that is, I Myself in person, and not by an angel) will go with thee.' See Ex. ch. 33.

As to any appearances of the Son of God under the Old Testament, by the name of angel or otherwise, however they have been contented for by some divines, whose intention was to do honor to the Messiah, they seem to be denied by the apostle's reasoning in He. 1:12, where God is said to have spoken to men by his Son only in these last days.

The light of God's face is a token of his favor, and is therefore put synonymously with face in Ps. 43:3, Da. 9:16.

Thus, in men, if the countenance be serene, it is a mark of good will; if fiery or frowning, of anger or displeasure.

Face also signifies anger, justice, and severity, as in Ge. 16:13, Ex. 2:15, Ps. 2:11, Jo. 2:6, Ps. 34:16, Re. 6:16.

1 Co. 13:12, 'Now we see as in a mirror darkly, but then face to face;' i. e. the difference between our knowledge here and our knowledge hereafter is such, invisible things being represented by visible — spiritual by natural — eternal by temporal.

To bow down the face in the dust, Is. 49:23, is a mark of the lowest humiliation and submission.

FAT is the emblem of fertility, abundance, wealth.

Jer. 31:14, 'I will satiate the souls of the priests with fatness.'

Ps. 135:5, 'My soul shall be satiated as with marrow and fatness.'

Ge. 27:28, 'God give thee of the dew of heaven, and of the fatness of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine.'

In Jer. 52:8, the words, 'they are waxed fat,' are thus explained by the Targum — 'they are become rich.' And so, in Ps. 22:29, the fat upon earth are the rich, the noble, and powerful.

And so, in Theocritus, Id. 7, v. 33, fat signifies rich or plentiful.

FEED, 'To feed others,' signifies to give ease and plenty, to enrich and to provide with all worldly necessities. For, according to the notion of the ancients, and especially the Hebrew language, riches consist in meat and drink, in having plenty of the fruits of the earth and much cattle, with all things necessary to human life.

Sa. Job and Abraham are said to be rich. And the rich man in the gospel is described by having plenty of corn and the fruits of the earth, more than his granaries could hold. And so, in Mat. 10:9, meat is made equivalent to gold, silver, brass, and clothes.

Pr. 30:8, 'Feed me with food convenient for me,' i. e. vouchsafe those blessings that are suited to my condition.

Jn. 21:15, 'Feed my lambs'; i. e. instruct new converts in the Christian doctrine.

Ho. 12:1, 'Ephraim feedeth on the wind'; i. e. he adopts empty and dangerous counsels.

FETE is taken metaphorically in various senses. Thus:

Jb. 29:15, 'I was feet to the lame'; i. e. I afforded assistance to the miserable and helpless.

Ge. 30:30, 'The Lord hath blessed thee at my foot'; i. e. through my solicitude in the care of thy cattle.

On the other hand, the 'foot of pride,' in Ps. 36:11, means the violence of haughty enemies.

The slipping of the foot implies dangers and calamities; as in Jb. 12:5, Ps. 28:17, 116:8, 140:5, 12.

Jer. 13:16, 'Before your feet stumble upon the mountains of gloominess'; i. e. before you are brought into great calamities.

1 Pe. 2:8, Christ and his word are said to be a stone of stumbling to those who stumble at the word, being disobedient.

On the contrary, to keep the feet from slipping is a symbol of the divine protection against malignant enemies. Thus:

Ps. 121:3, 'He will not suffer thy foot to be moved.'

Pr. 3:23, 26, and other places.

Jer. 2:25, 'Keep back thy foot from being unshod'; i. e. take care not to expose thyself by thy wicked ways to the wretched condition of going into captivity unshod, as the manner is represented, Is. 20:4.

To be under any one's feet, denotes the subjection of a subject to his sovereign, or of a servant to his master. See Ps. 8:6, 'Thou hast put all things under his feet,' and compare He. 2:8, and 1 Co. 15:25, 27, &c.

Lameness in the feet generally denotes affliction or calamity, as in Ps. 35:15, 38:18, Jer. 20:10, Mi. 6:4, 7, Zech. 3:19; in which two last places the term is feminine, as referring to the word sheep understood. As Flaccius observes: 'Est locutio sumpta ab ovi, nam ex illis solent multa aestate, presertim in calidioribus illis regionibus, claudicere.'

Is. 52:7. Ro. 10:15. Na. 1:15.

'How beautiful appear on the mountains
The feet of the joyful messenger; of him that announces peace.
Of the joyful messenger of good tidings; of him that announces salvation,
Of him that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth!'

See Lowth's note on the passage, which is well illustrated by the following observations of Campbell, Prel. Diss. 5, 2, § 4: 'The feet of those who had travelled far, in a hot country, through rough and dusty roads, present a spectacle naturally offensive to the beholder; nevertheless the consideration that the persons themselves are to us the messengers of peace and felicity; and that it is in bringing these welcome tidings they have contracted that sordid appearance, can in an instant convert deformity into beauty, and make us behold with delight this indication of their embassy — their dirty feet — as being the natural consequence of the long journey they had made.'

A thought somewhat similar occurs in Horace, b. n. Ode 1, who, speaking of victors returning with glory from a well-fought field, exhibits them as

'Non indecoro pulvere sordidos.'

The poet perceives a charm, something decorous, in the very dust and sweat with which the warriors are smeared, and which serve to recall to the mind of the spectator the glorious toils of the day; thus things in themselves ugly and disgusting share, when associated in the mind with things delightful, in the beauty and attractions of those things with which they are connected.'

An anonymous author thus remarks on the above text: — 'Non superbi caballi, sella cathedrales, non speciosa pallia, galeri cardinalitii, et alia preciosa in mundo, commendantur, sed simpliciter pedes, quo quin alius, quam humilis apostolus legationis denotatur, et omnes corum in docendi munere successores, ad candens virtutem instigantur.'

To this text may appropriately be referred that in Ep. 6:15, 'having your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace;' on which Lossius thus remarks — 'Pedes significat ministerium Evangelii, quos calcare oportet, hoc est, muniri occris, ut per spinas, sentes et tribulos, hoc est, omnia penitula transire possint, docendo et contiendendo Evangelium.'

Paul elegantly uses a phrase borrowed from the feet, in Ga. 2:14, 'When I saw that they walked not uprightly (lit. with a straight foot), according to the truth of the gospel?' Compare He. 12:13, and see Chandler on Ep. 6:15.

Ec. 5:1, 'Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God'; i. e. watch over your affections when you engage in his worship.

Nakedness of the feet was a sign of mourning. Ez. 24:17.

It was also a mark of adoration. Ex. 3:5.

Pr. 6:13,

'A wicked man speaketh with his feet.'

He uses malicious gestures while he is talking.'

The feet, by the Indian oneirocritics, are explained of the servants, goods, and life of the party. In Ex. 11:8, 'All the people at thy feet,' signify all the people whom thou commandst. The like phrase is found in Jud. 9:5. 1 K. 20:10. 2 K. 3:9.

'To set one's foot in a place, signifies to take possession of it; as in De. 1:36, 11:24, and other places.'

In Daniel, the feet and legs of the image denote a monarchy succeeding all the rest; the legs and feet being the extreme parts of the body, or the last parts of the image.

According to the Indian Interpreter, ch. 114, legs and feet of iron, in respect of a king, denote that he shall be long-lived; and, on the contrary, legs of glass signify short life and death.

It was the office of servants to wash the feet of their master and his guests; see Ge. 18:4. 19:2. 43:24. Jnd. 19:21. Hence Abigail's language, 1 S. 25:41; and see Jn. 13th chapter. Elisha is said to have poured water on the hands of Elijah, 2 K. 3:2. This practice is noticed by Virgil, Aen. 1,

'Dam manus famili lympha, cereisque canistris
Expedunt, tonsique fructu mandibilla vallis.'

And Homer, Odyssey, b. 1,

'They reclined in order on their couches and thrones,
And the ministering heralds poured water on their hands.'

FIRE is the symbol of the Deity.

He appeared in this element at the burning bush, and on mount Sinai. Ex. 3:2, 19:18.

He showed Himself to Isaiah, Ezekiel, and John, in the midst of fire. Is. 6:4. Ez. 1:4. Re. 1:11.

It is said that He will appear at his second coming. 2 Th. 1:8.

Daniel says, 7:10, 'A fiery stream issued, and came forth before Him.'

And He led his people Israel through the desert, under the form of a pillar of fire. Ex. 13:21.

The descent of the Holy Spirit was denoted by the appearance of blendent flames, or tongues of fire. Ac. 2:3.

God may be compared to fire, chiefly on account of his anger against sin, which consumes those against whom it is kindled, as fire does substance. De. 23: and 9:3. 32:22. Is. 10:17. Ez. 21:3. He. 12:29.

This word is compared to fire. Jer. 23:29.

In Isa. 3:5, it is said, 'Burning rods went forth at his feet,' i. e. the preaching of his word was accompanied with punishment against the disobedient — He trade upon them with destroying fire.

And thus in the vision of the seraphim or burning angels, Is. ch. 6, they are said to take a live coal from the altar, and put it to the prophet's mouth, telling him that his sins were purged, i. e. that he, being now declared righteous before God, and appointed to be his prophet, shall be enabled by his words to bring down God's fire of destruction upon, those against whom he prophesied.

And thus in Jer. 5:14, 'Behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them.'

Fire is sometimes the symbol of destruction, sickness, or war. It is thus used in Is. 42:25. 66:15. Ez. 22:20, 21, 22. Zeph. 1:3. Ps. 66:12. Jer. 6:5, 45.

It is also thus explained by the Indian Interpreter in ch. 159 and 209.

It is also the symbol of persecution, as in 1 Pe. 4:7, 4:12. 1 Co. 3:13, 15. 1 Th. 12:49.

Fire from heaven, in the symbolical language, denotes the continuation of persons in authority. Re. 13:13.

Couls of fire proceeding from God's mouth, denote his anger, as in Ps. 18:8, 12, 13.

Fire is the symbol of purification, in allusion to the process of refining. Ma. 3:2.

It is the symbol of final torment. Mk. 9:44. Mat. 25:41. 'It is of no use disputing whether the penal fire in the future state be material or not. If not a material fire, it will possess qualities equally awful and painful, suited to the nature of those who are subjected to it. And its perpetuity or permanence is expressed by terms that denote, to say the least, a very long duration, if not an interminable one. It is a fire 'prepared for the devil and his angels,' and therefore may be supposed to last as long as they last.'

One of Daniel's companions was called Abel, or rather Abed-nebo, i. e. the servant of Nebuchadnezzar, by which name fire was called among the Babylonians; and that deity was ascribed to it by the Chaldeans, as shown by Herodotus in his Chio. It is well known that fire-worship has prevailed in Persia for many an age. See an account of its origin in Pridian, Connect. v. i. p. 246, &c., and the alterations made in it by Zoroaster, p. 293, &c. of the same work.

The Persian monarchs, the kings of Lacedaemon, and the Roman emperors, had fire carried before them in processions; and so had generals at the head of their armies. See Xenoph. Cyr. b. 8, c. 23; Herodian, b. 1, § 20; and 50; Phoen. v. 1386. This custom of carrying fire before kings, as a mark of honor and grandeur, seems to be alluded to in Ps. 119:105. 132:17, and in 1 K. 15:4.

Xenophon, in his Lacedemonian Republic, describing the march of a Spartan king when he goes out to war, mentions a servant or officer, under the name of Fire-carrier, who went before him with fire taken from the altar, at which he had just been sacrificing, to the boundaries of the Spartan territory, where, sacrificing again, and then proceeding, a fire kindled likewise from this latter sacrifice, goes before him, without ever being extinguished.

Mk. 9:49, 'Every one shall be salted for the fire, as every sacrifice is salted with salt,' i. e., (says Macknight,) 'Every one shall be salted for the fire of God's altar,' i. e. shall be prepared to be offered a sacrifice to God, holy and acceptable. (See his Harmony on the place.) Beza has the same view, 'That, as under the law, every sacrifice was to be salted with salt, so it is required of every man, that being seasoned with the pure and incorrupt word, he consecrate himself unto God.'

Re. 8:5. The fire from the altar represents new commotions in the world, and great calamities by the righteous judgment of God.

Re. 14:18, 'The angel who had power over fire.' An allusion, as Danzibz thinks, to the office of that priest who had the charge by lot in the temple service to take care of the fire on the altar. Grotius considers it as denoting the angel who had the office of God's vengeance. According to the theology of the Jewish doctors, every virtue or power which God had set over any thing, is called the angel presiding over that thing.

Ez. 38:22, 'Fire and brimstone will I rain upon him' i. e. upon Gog. Ez. 39:6, 'And I will send a fire upon Magog.'

Compare Re. 20:8, 9, where, see Lowman, who is of opinion, that the event may be literally fulfilled by a combination of enemies to the Christian name.

'It is plain,' says Newcome, 'that the extraordinary circumstances mentioned in v. 19-22, remain to be accomplished on the future enemies of the Jews, when his people are reinstated in God's favor.'

FIRST BORN. Jesus Christ is called 'the first-born from the dead,' in Col. 1:18, and Re. 1:5. He appears to be so called, as being the first who rose by his own power and us being the first who rose never to die again.

The first-born, under the Old Testament, may be considered as types of Christ.

Sometimes the whole Jewish nation is so called, as in Ex. 4:22.

And the Messiah is pointed at in Ps. 89:27, under this title.

And He is owned as such in Ro. 8:29, and He. 1:6.

'The phrase 'from the dead,' or from a state of death, has an allusion to the destruction of the first born of Egypt, and the sparing of the first born of Israel, who, in memorial of this mercy, were in future to be consecrated to God.' See Ex. ch. 12 and 13.

To the first-born were allotted power and superiority over the rest of his brethren; hence Jacob's address to Reuben, Ge. 49:3; and Isaac's reply to Esau, Ge. 20:37.

Therefore Christ is the first-born, as being prince and lord over his brethren. See He. 2:10, 11. He is the head of the whole creation, and especially of the new creation, the church.

To the first-born was assigned the office of priesthood, Ex. 24:5, for whom the Levites were afterwards accepted. Nu. 3:45.

And of Jesus it is said, 'He is a priest forever according to the order of Melchizedek.' Ps. 110:3. He. 3:1. He. 5:5, 6. And by one offering He hath perfected forever them that are sanctified. He. 10:14. And He could not have been a true priest, if He had not, through the Eternal Spirit, offered Himself without spot to God, and with his own blood entered into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us.'

The first-born were holy and consecrated to God. Ex. 13:1. 'Sanctify unto me all the first-born, whatsoever openeth the womb among the children of Israel, both of man and of beast: it is mine.' It is afterwards said, verse 13, 'All the first-born of man among thy children thou shalt redeem.' To this there is allusion in 1 Pe. 1:18, where Christians are said to be redeemed, 'not with silver or gold, but with the precious blood of Christ.'

Christ also was consecrated to the service of God, as the first-born, when He was inaugurated by baptism. Mat. 3:17.

The first born also sanctified their brethren, and, as it were, preserved them in life. Rightly, therefore, the apostle affirms, He. 2:11, 'Both he that sanctifieth, and they that are sanctified, are all of one; wherefore he is not ashamed to call them brethren.'

The first-born had double share of the inheritance, as being the prop and ornament of the family. He. 2:17. And Christ is constituted heir of all things. See He. 1:2. Lu. 22:29. Ps. 2:8. Ep. 1:3. Ps. 68:19. Ro. 8:17.

See this doctrine beautifully stated by Paul in Col. 1:12-22.

FISHES. A sea being considered as a kingdom or empire, the living creatures in it must be the typical fishes, or men.

But if a sea be considered in respect only of the waters, of which it is a collection, then the waters will signify the common people; and the fishes, or the creatures in the sea, living, as having a power to act, will denote their rulers. And in this sense are the fishes mentioned in Ez. 29:4, 5, explained by the Targum of the 'princes of Pharaoh.' Newcome thinks there is here an allusion to the heavy loss which Apries and his Egyptian army sustained in the expedition against the Cyreneans, towards whom they must have marched over the desert. Herod. 2, § 161. Apries himself did not fall in the battle, but was taken prisoner by Amasis, and strangled by the Egyptians. Herod. 2, § 169. Jer. 64:30.

See Mat. 4:19. Jer. 16:16. Ha. 1:14. Mat. 13:47.

FLESH signifies the riches, goods, and possessions of any person or subject, conquered, oppressed, or slain, as the case is.

Thus, in Ps. 73:14, the meat or flesh thereto mentioned, is the riches and spoils of Pharaoh and the Egyptians.

See also Is. 17:4. Mi. 3:2, 3. Zeph. 11:9-16; in all which places flesh is explained by the Targum, of riches and substance.

And thus, in Da. 7:5, to 'devour much flesh,' is to conquer and spoil many enemies of their lands and possessions.

All the oneirocritics concur in the same exposition of this symbol. In ch. 233, they say, 'That if any one dreams that he finds or eats the flesh of dragons, he shall obtain riches proportionable from a great king,' which is like that of the Israelites eating the flesh of the leviathan or dragon—the king of Egypt in the wilderness. Ps. 74:13, 14.

And again, in ch. 285, 'To dream of eating the flesh of a scorpion, denotes the being possessed of the estate of such an enemy, as answers to the signification of the symbol.'

And the Indian, in ch. 87, says compendiously, 'Flesh is universally interpreted of riches.'

To the same purpose speaks also Artemidorus, who, in b. 3, c. 23, says, 'That it is not good for a rich man to dream that he eats his own flesh, for it signifies the utter wasting of his riches or substance.'

So also in b. 1, c. 72, to 'dream of eating the flesh of any wild beast, denotes the being greatly enriched by the substance of enemies.'

PLA. The name Bedsebab, given in the New Testament to the prince of demons, signifies 'lord of flies'; and the fly was his hieroglyphic, as Jerome remarks, because he never ceases to infest the human race, and to try all methods by which he may annoy and injure them.

See under BEE.

FOREHEAD signifies the public profession or appearance before men.

So the Indian Interpreter, ch. 53, says, 'The forehead and nose denote coulances and riches before men.' And Artemidorus says, that the forehead signifies liberty of speech.

Of old, servants were stigmatized in their forehead with their master's mark. Martial, b. 2, ep. 29; b. 3, ep. 21; b. 8, ep. 75; Seneca de Ira, b. 3, c. 3; Plutarch in Nicias.

This was forbidden the Jews, in Le. 19:28; only the high-priest on his forehead bore a plate or crown of gold, on which the name of God was written, to show that the priest was his servant, and that all his service was consecrated to God only.

Hence, to 'receive a mark in one's forehead,' signifies to make an open profession of belonging to that person or party, whose mark is said to be received.

Rv. 13:16, 'to receive a mark in the right hand, or in their foreheads.'

Some think there is here an allusion to the manner in which Ptolemy Philopator persecuted the Jews. See Pridex, Connect. pt. 2, b. 2.

Sometimes the stigmata, or marks put on the forehead, were the symbol of disgrace and punishment, as Diogenes Laertius says of the father of Dion, h. 4. 'That he received a brand on his forehead, as a mark of the anger of his master.'

That captives, and others whom the ancients reduced to subjection, were thus marked, Plutarch tells us, in Perie., that 'the Athenians marked an owl on their captives.'

Idolaters, by that ceremony, used to consecrate themselves to their false deities. The marks used on these occasions were various. Sometimes they contained the name of the god, sometimes his particular ensign, as the thunderbolt of Jupiter, the trident of Neptune, the iry of Bacchus, &c.; or, lastly, they marked themselves with some mystical number whereby the god's name was described. Thus the sun, who was signified by the number 608, is said to have been represented by these two numeral letters, XH.

These three ways of stigmatizing are all expressed in Re. 13:16, 17. 'And he causeth all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name.'

See Potter's Antiq. of Greece, v. 1, p. 75.

Soldiers also wore the names of their leaders or generals impressed upon their bodies, as we learn from Vegetius de Re milit. lib. 2, c. 5. And in this sense some explain Paul's remark in Ga. 6:17, 'I bear in my body the marks (otryvara) of the Lord Jesus'; meaning the scars he received from stripes, chains, &c. in the service of the gospel.

See also Is. 44:5, thus rendered by the Septuagint, 'And another shall write upon his hand, I belong to God.' See Lowth's note on the passage, where he observes, 'The Christians seem to have imitated this practice, by what Procopius says on this place of Isaiah: "Because many marked their wrists or their arms with the sign of the cross, or with the name of Christ."

Whole people or nations were sometimes so impressed. 'That the Babylonians, Dacians, and others, were, we learn from Pliny, Herodian, &c. That the Arabians were, Gobius informs us. The Jews say, that king Jeohakim wore the name of the idol Cotonazar branded on his skin.'

From these customs we may now conclude what meaning to attach to the phrase in Re. 22:1, 'And his name shall be in their foreheads,' viz. that such are the servants of the living God, the ministers of the King of kings, whom He hath redeemed by his own blood, Ac. 20:28. Th. 2:14; so that they are his peculiar people, 1 Pe. 2:9, to celebrate the divine virtues. They serve Him day and night in his temple, Re. 7:15, as attendants on the celestial throne. Once they wore the mark of the beast and of Satan; but after they were redeemed, they bore the mark of the living God impressed upon them, by regeneration and sanctification. Ep. 4:22-24.

It implies also, that such are the soldiers of the Lord of hosts, who form his encampment, under the banner of Him 'who stands up for an ensign to the people?' Is. 11:10; wearing the sword of the Spirit, the shield of faith, and the breastplate of righteousness.

It implies that they are the priests of God, Re. 1:5, 1 Pe. 2:9. Under the Old Testament, the high-priest alone wore the plate of God; but now, all Christians are constituted kings and priests unto God even the Father. And therefore those who stand with the Lamb on mount Zion, Re. 14:1, have the Father's name written on their foreheads.

The name here inscribed, is supposed to be the name Jehovah, which is his memorial. Ho. 12:5. Zch. 14:20; Is. 64:5. As to the manner of inscribing, not to pursue sacred analogies too minutely, we may adopt Paul's expression, 2 Co. 3:3, 'written not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God.' See also 2 Co. 3:1; Ep. 4:38.

The name is written on the forehead, obviously because it is the most conspicuous part,—whatever is on the forehead, cannot be concealed. As Ueber says, 'Front est la partie du visage la plus manifeste, et la plus facile a reconnaître.' And Pliny calls it, 'Omnium hominis affectuum index.' Hist. Nat. lib. 11, c. 37. The name of God, therefore, being on their foreheads, is an open confession that they profess publicly before the world that they belong to Him, and not to idolatry, antichristianism, the beast, or Satan. It is said of Paul, Ac. 9:15, 16: 'He is a chosen vessel unto Me, to bear my name before the Gentiles, and kings, and the children of Israel. For I will show him how great things he must suffer for my name's sake.'

FOREST is used symbolically to denote a city, kingdom, polity, or the like. Ez. 29:46, 'forest of the south.'

Ezekiel was in the northern part of Chaldea; and therefore Judea was to the south of him. Secker supposes that a city is called a forest, rather from its inhabitants than its buildings.

Devoted kingdoms are elsewhere represented under the image of a forest, which God threatened to burn or cut down. See Is. 10:17, 18, 19, 34, where the briars and thorns denote the common people; the glory of the forest are the nobles and those of highest rank and importance.

See also Is. 37:24, where Sennacherib is described as boasting thus of his invasion of Jerusalem:

'Then has said,
By the multitude of my chariots have I ascended.
The height of the mountains, the sides of Lebanon;
And I will cut down his tallest cedars, his choicest fir-trees;
And I will penetrate into his extreme retreats, his richest forests.'

Lowth's Version.

See Jer. 21:14, 22:7, 40:23, and Zch. 11:2, where Newcome observes, that under these images the fall of mighty men, and the subversion of the Jewish polity, are represented.

Is. 32:19,

'But the hill shall fall, and the forest be brought down,
And the city shall be laid level with the plain.'

Lowth acknowledges this passage to be very obscure. He supposes the city to be Nineveh or Babylon; and quotes Ephraim Syrus on the place, who interprets it 'Saltus, i. e. Assyria regnum—civitas, i. e. magnifica Assyriorum castra.'

Lya expounds these words in a singular way. 'The hill,' says he, 'that is, the multitude of the Roman army, shall be at the falling down of the forest, i. e. at the overthrowing of the temple and palace.' Something parallel to the passage in Isaiah may be found in Re. 16:21, at the downfall of the mystic Babylon. 'And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every stone about the weight of a talent.' See under HAIL.

FOURNICATION. See under WOMAN.

FOUNTAIN, or stream of living, i. e. of continually-flowing water, in opposition to standing or stagnant pools, is the symbol of refreshment to the weary, and also denotes the perpetuity and inexhaustible nature of spiritual comforts and refreshments afforded to the saints by the Holy Spirit, and by the public worship of God. It was such as these the Psalmist thirsted after, as the hart panteth for the water-brook, when he was persecuted and driven from his throne, 'God being the fountain of living waters.'

After the same manner, wisdom, on account of its usefulness and delight, is compared, in Pr. 18:4, to a flowing brook, which is generally clear, as well as shallow: a fit emblem of the ingenuous mind, which knows no disguise or dissimulation, and whose designs are easily discovered, because, as good is always its object, it affects no concealment.

Zch. 13:1,

'In that day there shall be a fountain opened To the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, For sin, and for defilement.'

The blood of Christ, which cleanseth from all sin (1 Jn. 1:7), is manifestly here intended, the Jews being, upon their repentance and conversion, to be admitted to all the privileges of the Christian covenant. The Hebrew words, rendered sin and defilement, are legal terms; the former denotes sin generally, or any transgression of the law which required atonement; the latter is used for that uncleanness which secluded man from all intercourse with God and holy things. Whatever efficacy legal sacrifices had in purifying the people, the same is ascribed to the blood of Christ in the gospel dispensation. In the term 'defilement,' there is an allusion to the water of separation, or of purification for sin, Nu. 19:9. Means of purification from moral pollution shall be afforded to the Jews by the terms of the Christian covenant. See Blayney.

Jo. 3:18, 'A fountain shall come forth from the house of Jehovah.'

In this verse, either the times of the Messiah are described, or we have a description of Jerusalem after its final restoration, when a golden age shall commence among its inhabitants, and when the knowledge of God and of his Christ shall a second time be widely diffused from it. See Ez. 47:8. Zch. 14:8.

Fountain, or pool, i. e. Siloam.

One of the most remarkable ceremonies performed at the feast of tabernacles, was the libation or pouring out of water, drawn from the fountain or pool of Siloam, upon the altar. As, according to the Jews themselves, this water was an emblem of the Holy Spirit, Jesus Christ manifestly alluded to it, when He cried, saying, 'If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink.'

Pr. 5:16, 'Let thy fountains be dispersed abroad,' i. e. May your posterity be numerous.

De. 33:28, 'The fountain of Jacob,' i. e. The people that proceed from Jacob.

Pr. 5:18, 'Let thy fountain be blessed,' i. e. Let thy wife be blessed with children, herrenness being esteemed a curse.

Pr. 13:14,

'The law of the wise is a fountain of life.'

Or rather, as Durell renders,

'The laws are to the wise a fountain of life;

To the rebellious, they are the sources of death.'

Ez. 12:6, 'Ere the pitcher be broken at the fountain,' i. e. Before the circulation of the blood be stopped at the heart.

Ps. 68:26, 'Bless the Lord from the fountain of Israel,' i. e. Ye who are sprung from the stock of Israel.

Re. 8:10, 'Fountains of waters.' Re. 14:7. Re. 16:4.

See Lowman's excellent notes on the first and third of these passages.

No. 13:15, 'His fountains shall be dried up,' i. e. His prosperous condition and its attendant blessings shall cease.

As fountains of water may be considered as necessities to the support of life, so the drying up of these symbolically expresses a scarcity of things necessary. See the above passage in Io. 13:15, and Is. 19:5.

Vitrina interprets Re. 8:10, of the heresy of Arius, and the third part of the rivers to mean the third part of Christendom, which was then divided into East, West, and South.

Isaiah has a beautiful passage in allusion to the exodus, expressive of God's mercy to them in passing through the desert. See Is. 41:18.

FOUR is a symbolical number, denoting a universality of the matters comprised.

As in Jer. 49:36, the four winds signify all the winds.

Is. 11:12, the four corners of the earth denote all parts of the earth.

Ez. 7:2, 'the four corners of the land,' i. e. all parts of Judea. 'And therefore,' as Philo says, 'four is a number of universality in nature.'

Restitution in some cases was to be made fourfold. Ex. 22:1, 2, 8, 12, 6. Lu. 19:8.

We read also of four bowls, four rings, four rows of stones, &c.

In Pr. ch. 30, the enumeration of several subjects is limited to four. See verses 15, 18, 21, 24, 29.

Both Ezekiel and St. John describe four living creatures, as seen in a vision, with four faces and four wings.

Daniel speaks of the four great monarchies, as four great beasts that came up from the sea. We read also, 8:8, of four notable horns.

Zecchary beholds also four horns, four carpenters, and four chariots. 1:18; 20, 61.

Ex. 27:1, the altar of burnt-offering, is commanded to be made four-square.

And in Re. 21:16, it is said of the New Jerusalem, that the city lieth four-square.

Four may justly, therefore, be termed a mystic number. The four angels mentioned, Re. 19:15, have been conceived by some to represent the Turkish tetrarchies, or the four kingdoms of the Turks seated on the Euphrates. But as four is a perfect number, denoting universality, it may, as Lowman observes, denote here the whole power of these destroyers, gathered together from every quarter of the land they dwelt in.

FOX is the symbol of tyrannical kings and crafty persecutors.

Lu. 13:32, 'Go and tell that fox,' namely, Herod.

All know the character of the animal, from the many fables and proverbs respecting it; so that the fox is generally considered to be the representative of cunning, crafty, or deceitful persons. 'What is an opprobrious and malicious man, but a fox?' says Epictetus; in Ari- lib. 1, cap. 3. And Suidas, 'A fox is not to be won by gifts.' And Plutarch, in his Life of Lysander, 'If a lion's skin is not enough, let a fox's be added to it; i. e. if power and strength be not sufficient, cunning must be joined to them.' Agamemnon is said by Homer to be κερδακόπων, to be endowed with a fox's disposition; and Pompey is described by Plutarch as having more of the fox than the lion in him. And Persius says, Sat. 5, and Aristophanes has compared soldiers to foxes, Hipp. Act. 2, sc. 2. Ezekiel, 13:4, says, 'They prophesy, O Israel, are like the foxes in the deserts'; i. e. as Newcome observes, 'They seize their prey in a cunning and cowardly manner, and then fly into lurking-places.' Some have gone so far, as to suppose our Savior spoke figuratively, rather than literally, when he said, Mat. 8:20, 'Foxes have holes of caverns, and the birds of the air have places to roost in; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head.' They suppose he means by foxes the false teachers among the Jews; but this seems to be straining things too much.

'Ascum rapido versus sub pector vulpem;

FROGS are represented by Aristophanes and Juvenal as the proper inhabitants of the Stygian lake. See Arist. Ranae; Juv. Sat. 2, v. 150.

Horus gives them the epithet of nasty, Epod. 5, v. 19, and makes their blood an ingredient in sorcerous charms.

The same epithet is also given them in Ovid, Met. 5; and Martial, b. 10, Ep. 37.

The Oriental onirocritics are not so clear on this point as they usually are; for they content themselves with ranking the frogs among serpents and other creeping things, taking them to signify enemies in general.

Philo says, 'They are the symbol of vain opinions and glory, having only noise and sounds void of reason.'

Artemidorus says, 'Frogs signify impostors and darters, and bode good to them that get their living out of the common people.'

And the frog, by the Egyptians, was made the symbol of an impudent, quick-sighted fellow; the frog, according to them, having blood nowhere else than in its eyes. See Horap. Hierogl. b. 2.

Re. 16:13, 'I saw three unclean spirits like frogs,' a plain allusion to the plagues of Egypt.

Banbury supposes the three unclean spirits to be the monks, the religious knights, and the secular clergy of the Roman church.

Lowman says, 'They seem to intimate some confederacy of the principal Papist powers.'

FURNACE is used in Scripture to denote, metaphorically, a place of great affliction. So De. 4:20, 'The Lord hath taken you and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, out of Egypt.' See also Jer. 11:4.

Fire of a furnace for purifying metals, is always used to signify such afflictions as God sends for the amendment of men. So in Jer. 9:7, 'I will melt them and try them; if he could by such means purify their manners, since all others had proved ineffectual for their amendment.'

See the process beautifully enlarged upon in Ez. 22:17-23, where the term furnace might more fitly be rendered cruelty, the vessel in which metals are fused. And so, in Ps. 127, 'Silver refined in a crucible of earth.' Refiners' crucibles are to this day made of earth.

The place of torment seems to be called a furnace. Mat. 13:42, 50.

GARDEN is the symbol of prosperity and fruitfulness.

Job. 8:16, .

'He is green before the sun,
And his branch shooteth forth in his garden.'

Is. 51:3,

'He shall make her wilderness like Eden,
And her desert like the garden of Jordan;

'Joy and gladness shall be found in her;

'Thanksgiving, and the voice of melody.'

The world in general is sometimes spoken of as a garden, and kings and great men as tall trees in it. Thus, Ez. 31:8,9, speaking of Pharaoh,

'The cedar in the garden of God could not hide him;
The fir-trees were not like his boughs;
And the plane-trees were not as his branches;
Not any tree in the garden of God
Was like unto him in his beauty.
I made him beautiful in the multitude of his branches,
So that all the trees of Eden envied him;

'Whose were in the garden of God?'

In this sense, also, Tertullian explains the parable in Lu. 13:19, of the grain of mustard-seed cast into the garden, by which he understands Christ, who came into this world. And see Is. 61:11,

'Surely, as the earth poureth forth tender shoots,
And the garden maketh her seed to germinate;
So shall the Lord Jehovah cause righteousness to spring forth.'

And praise in the presence of all the nations.'

Nothing is more frequent among the fathers, than under the symbol of a garden to describe the doctrine of grace. Thus Jerome, on Jer. 29: says, 'The sacred doctrine is called a garden, as being a paradise of delights, where also hope and good works flourish.' See Bernard on Song 4; and Gregory on Ezekiel, homily 8.

The church is often compared to a garden by the prophets. Thus, Is. 58:11, 'Thou shalt be like a well-watered garden'; and Jer. 31:12, 'And their souls shall be as a well-watered garden.'

As to those passages in the Song of Songs, where a garden is mentioned, no note is to be taken of them, farther than as simple and literal comparisons, as it is more than doubtful whether that book has any spiritual meaning, or is any thing more than an epithalamium, or marriage-ode, in relation to Solomon's espousals, and in praise of the divine institution of holy wedlock. The mystical sense seems to have been first adopted by some of the fathers, who, with more piety than judgment, as Durell observes, thought that, as Paul compares the union of Christ with his church to a marriage, this poem ought also to be interpreted with reference to the same subject.

But how is it consistent with this idea, that neither the name of God nor of Christ ever occurs in it? — that there is not one religious or moral sentiment to be found in it? — that it is not once either quoted or in the most distant manner alluded to in any part of the New Testament, or in any other part of the sacred writings? — that it is not directed to be read in the churches? — and that those who attempt to trace the allegory in every part, are soon lost in an inextricable labyrinth? The mere similarity, real or supposed, of some expressions in the New Testament, proves nothing; neither is mere length of time during which the opinion of its mystical meaning has been held, a solid foundation for the basis of truth to rest upon.

Garden is the symbol of the church triumphant. Lu. 23:43, 'This day shalt thou be with me in paradise'; i. e., in a garden of pleasure. See also 2 Cor. 12:4; and Re. 2:7. The Turks or Mahometans, it is well known, describe their heaven under this image. See the Koran.

The people of God are often spoken of as plants. Ps. 80:8,

'Thou hast brought a vine out of Egypt,
Thou hast cast out the heathen, and planted it.'

See Is. 5:1, &c. Jer. 2:21, and other places. Hence good works are so often adverted to under the image of fruit. And God is spoken of as a vine-dresser. Jn. 15:1; and Paul uses similar phrases in 1 Co. 3:6, 'I have planted, Apollos watered, and God hath given the increase.'

Gardens and vineyards, in ancient times, were surrounded with walls, and guarded by watchmen. To this there is allusion in Jer. 27:5,

'I Jehovah keep it;
I will water it every moment,
I will take care of it by night,
I will keep guard over it by day.'

To those who admire descriptions of this kind, Homer's account of the gardens of Alcinous, in Odyssey, b. 7, will give gratification. The passage is too long to be transcribed here at large; the following is part of Pope's version:

'Tall, thriving trees confessed the fruitful mould;
The reddening apple ripens here to gold;

Here the blue fig with lucious juice o'erflows,
With deeper red the full pomegranate glows.
The branch here bears beneath the weighty pear,
And verdant olive decks round the year.'

The apostle has a still finer enumeration, when he describes the fruits of the Spirit, Gal. 5:22, love, joy, peace, concord, benignity, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. Compare Th. 2:11.

Gardens were employed to produce aromatic herbs and flowers; and hence we find the term odor, savor, or fragrance, in use among Eastern writers. Thus Paul says, 'We are unto God a sweet odor in Christ'; and similar passages, And in another place, Phil. 4:17, 'I desire feud that may abound to your account.' But I have all, and abound; I am full, having received from Ephaphroditus the things which were sent from you, an odor of a sweet smell.

Gardens were sometimes used as places of sepulture. Thus Manasseh was buried in the garden of his own house, 2 K. 21:18; and that wherein the Savior was interred was in Joseph's garden, Mk. 15:46. Suetonius says of Gallia, that he was buried in his own gardens in the Aurelian Way. And Ophirius Panocrinus says, 'In the Flaminian, Appian, and other ways, there still appear many urns and ancient sepulchers, almost consumed with age.'

GARMENTS are naturally used to denote the outward appearance.

Clean garments are an emblem of inward purity.

White garments also denote holiness of life and purity of conscience. Ps. 51:7. Is. 1:18. Ec. 9:7, 8.

They were the tokens of joy and pleasure Ec. 9:8. Is. 52:1, 61:10.

Kings and nobles were arrayed in white garments; so were the common people on festive days.

God gave the Jewish priests white garments, as ensigns of honor, as well as of purity. Ex. 28:3-10. Le. 16:34.

Hence, to be clothed in white signifies, in the prophetic style, to be prosperous and successful — to be honored and rewarded.

Not to defile one's garments is a Hebrew phrase, and is also symbolical, denoting, not to pollute one's self with idolatry, and to abstain from all inferior kinds of pollution. See Re. 3:4. 'Thou hast a few names,' i. e. persons, 'even in Sardis, who have not defiled their garments,' i. e. who have preserved themselves from the general corruption, 'and they shall walk with me in white, for they deserve it.' White or shining garments are here promised, as marks of favor and distinction. Thus Pharaoh honored Joseph, by arraying him in vestures of fine linen, Ge. 41:12. And in Re. 19:8, fair linen is interpreted to mean the righteousness of saints, as well as a mark of honor. The robe is said to be 'arrayed in it, clean and white,' in allusion to the custom in the Eastern nations; a custom still existing, for the bridegroom to present the bride with garments. It was used in the times of the patriarchs, and was the custom among the Greeks and Romans. Eurip. Helen. v. 1448; Terence, Heaut. act 5, sc. 1; Odyss. 5, 127; Zozimus b. 5, p. 290.

In the primitive church, persons, so soon as baptized, received new and white garments, in token of their being cleansed from all past sins, and as an emblem of that innocence and purity to which they had then bound themselves. Hence they were called candidati, from candidus, white, and hence our English term candidate. These garments they wore for seven days, and then they were laid up as an evidence against them if they ever revolted from their holy profession which they had embraced and publicly made; and, in this sense, not to defile one's garments is, not to act contrary to our baptismal vow and engagements.

The apostle seems to have had an eye on this, when he wrote to the Galatians, 3:27, 'As many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ.' Iacanthus well expresses this in his hymn on the resurrection of the Savior —

'Cum paras anima sacra lavera hanc,
Candidus crederit nullus excludere unda,
Atque vetus vitium purgat in anno novo,
Fulgenter annas vestis quoque candida signat,' &c.

And Cyril says, on the same subject, Eodou etor etekhovres, &c. 'As soon as, therefore, ye have gone in, ye put off your garment, which indeed is the image of the old man and his works; having put it off, ye became naked, in imitation of Christ, who was stripped when He was crucified.' See Ep. 4:22-24, where the language is particularly appropriate; the pagan Ephesians being noted for the luxury of their dress, as may be seen in Athenaeus, lib. 12, who introduces Antiphantes, saying, 'Quam regnorum incolis haec turba, unde prompti, an longe sunt, molles, delitantes vestibus anicti, voluptate diuinitates?'

Philo makes the garment the symbol of our reason. Hence, to observe one's garments is to make reason the rule of one's actions.

To bestow garments, as is sometimes done by Eastern princes, is a great honor and mark of favor — if it be a stole or tunic, very great; if with it he adds the great cloak or robe, it is a complete favor. The highest mark of esteem and love is when the prince gives the garments from his own body, as Jonathan did to David, 1 S. 18:4.

Garments of scarlet were worn by the Roman emperors, as their proper habit. Hence Pilate's soldiers, as being Romans, in derision clothed our Savior as a king, by putting on him a scarlet robe, Mat. 27:28.

Garments of sackcloth. Sackcloth signifies any manner of which sacks were anciently made, which was generally of skins without dressing. The ancient prophets were for most part clothed thus; hence the false prophets affected this garb, for which God upbraids them in Zeb. 13:4, "Neither shall they wear a garment of hair to deceive." And so our Lord describes that sort of men, Mat. 7:15, "Beware of false prophets, who come to you in sheep's clothing."

The author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, 11:37, in enumerating the great things which have been done and suffered, through faith, by prophets and other righteous persons, mentions this, that "they wandered about in sheep-skins and goat-skins, being destitute, afflicted, tormented;" alluding to the persecutions to which many of them were exposed from idolatrous princes. That Elijah was habited in this manner is well known, 2 K. 1:8. Clement, in his First Epistle to the Corinthians, says, "Let us be imitators of those who went about in goat skins and sheep-skins, preaching the coming of Christ; we mean Elias, and Elishas, and Ezekiel, the prophets." Elijah, as a sign that he considered Elishah his successor, left him his mantle, which the latter put on, having rent and cast away his own clothes, 2 K. 2:12,13; and, therefore, when the sons of the prophets saw him with that garment, they said immediately, that "the spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha." So Isaiah, 20:2, had a sackcloth upon his loins as a prophet; and John Baptist wore something similar, Mat. 3:4, not only as a prophet, but also as a Nazarite.

Sackcloth was also the habit of mourners and persons in affliction; Ge. 37:34, 2 K. 6:30, Ps. 39:11, Is. 50:3; and perhaps the prophets wore it as a sign of their mourning for the sins of the people, and for the dishonor their God suffered thereby; and hence all of them preached repentance.

The filthy garments of Joshua the high-priest, in Zeli. 3:3, are the squallid and polluted garments of a captive; and the removal of them, and clothing him with goodly apparel, probably imports that the priestly office was to be resumed and exercised with decency and splendor.

The Phenicians, in a time of misery, put on sackcloth and sat on the dunghill, as appears from Menander, whose words are preserved by Porphyry in his Book de Abstinentia, b. 4, § 15.

The Romans had also the same custom; and hence black and dirty garments are, in the oneirocritics, the symbols of great affliction.

There is a sublime passage in Is. 63:1, &c., where the Messiah seems to be described in the habit of a conqueror after some great victory:

Quest. — Who is this that cometh from Edom,
With garments deeply dyed from Bozrah;
This that is magnificent in his apparel,
Marching on in the greatness of his strength?

Ans. — I who publish righteousness, and am mighty to save.

Quest. — Why is thine apparel red,
And thy garments as one that treadeth the wine-vat?

Ans. — I have trodden the wine-vat alone,
And of the people there was none with me.

See Lowth on the place.

See Re, 19:13.

When the apparel of Supreme Deity is attempted to be described, it is in such terms as these, Ps. 104:12, —

* Thou art clothed with honor and with majesty;
Thou coverest Thyself about with light as with a garment,
&c.

GATES are sometimes put for cities, as in Is. 14:31,

"Howl, O gate; cry out, O city."

La. 2:9,

"Her gates are sunk into the earth."

Ps. 147:13,

"He hath strengthened the bars of thy gates;

He hath blessed thy children within thee."

They are the symbols of power, government, security; justice being originally administered without the gates of cities. The gate of the city was the forum, or place of public concourse, Pr. 1:21, 83. There also was the court of judicature held, for trying all causes, and deciding all affairs. There also was the market, where corn and provisions were sold. See De. 25:7, Ru. 4:19, 2 S. 15:2, 2 Ch. 18:9, Isa. 5:14, Ps. 127:5, Pr. 22:22, 24:7, 31:23, Am. 5:15.

The square town, which is the principal entrance to the Alhambra, or red palace of the Moorish kings in Grenada, from its being the place where justice was summarily administered, was styled the gate of judgment.

The Turkish government is also known at this day by the name of the Ottoman Porte, because the royal palace of the Turks is wont to be called Porta. Thus Leuenclavios, Hist. Turc. lib. 13, "Adequo pars enim omnem expediun, imperio suo totam subiectum Europeanum Rumeium et Portam seu regiam suam ad Vardurum Genizem transiuit."

Is. 60:11,

"The gates shall be open continually;
By day or night, they shall not be shut;"

denoting the security of God's people; gates open, are a sign of peace; gates shut, of fear, or of a state of war, or of affliction, misery, and desolation, Jn. 20:19. Cesar de Belli Gall. lib. 3, c. 4, "portas clauserunt." Jer. 20:19, where the prophet says, "The cities of the south are shut up, and none openeth;" meaning that they were uninhabited, and of course the gates were kept shut, and not opened for the admission of passengers to and fro.

In Is. 29:21,

"Who bewildered the poor man in speaking,
And laid snares for him that pleaded in the g.d.e," there is allusion to what is before mentioned, namely, the distribution of justice. Shaw, in his Travels, says, "They are heard by the treasurer, master of the horse, and other principal officers of the regency of Algiers, who sit constantly in the gate of the palace for that purpose," p. 315, fol. He adds, in a note, "The Ottoman court likewise seems to have been called the Porta, from the distribution of justice, and the despatch of public business, that is carried on in the gates of it."

The prophet Amos has a reference to the same custom, 5:10,

"Ye that hate him who reproach in the gate,

And abhor him who speaketh uprightly."

Soelen has this quotation from Maimonides:

"In iure qualibet Israelitae constituant Sy-num minus, cuius sedes in porta urbis."

There is a well-known sense of the term gate, which refers to it either as the cause of something done or intended, or else as the medium leading to some end. In this sense Jacob speaks of the visionary ladder; he calls it "the gate of heaven;" and our Lord speaks of the broad and narrow gate and way, the one leading to life, the other to perdition. Mat. ch. 7, Lu. 13:24.

The cause of joy or grief is called a gate by the poets. Thus, Ovid, lib. 2, de Porta, Eleg. 7, "litteris janua causa mear;" and lib. 1, de Renatu. Amor, "artis tristissima janua nostrae?" And Luretius, b. 3, v. 830,

"Haud igitur lethi precusa est janua menti."

And Ovid, b. 1, Met.,

"Prælustraque janua lethi,

"Eclerum nostro luxus extendit in evum."

It would appear that altars were formerly erected before the gates. See 2 K. 23:8, "He brake down the high places of the gates that were in the entering in of the gate of Joshua, the governor of the city, which were on a man's left hand at the gate of the city." And Ac. 14:13, "Then the priest of Jupiter, who was before their city, brought filleted oxen to the gates, and would have offered sacrifice with the people." Jupiter was accounted the tutelary deity of the place, and his temple stood near the gates.

In Mat. 16:18, there is a well-known passage to this effect: "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock will I build my church, and the gates of hades, i. e. death, shall not prevail against it." The gate of hades is a natural periphrasis for death itself, and corresponds with Hezekiah's expression in Is. 38:10,

"I shall pass through the gates of the grave;
I am deprived of the residue of my years."

In the Wisdom of Solomon, we have a similar expression, 16:13, "Thou hast power of life and death; Thou leadest to the gates of hades, and bringest up again."

And Homer makes Achilles say,

"Who can think one thing, and another tell,
My soul detests them as the gates of hell."

That is, I hate him as death, or I hate him mortally. To say, then, that the gates of hades shall not prevail against the church, is, in other words, to say, it shall never die, it shall never be extinct. All the errors, superstitions, controversies, all the persecutions, edicts, tortures, with which the church has been visited, have not proved mortal, and never shall. See Campbell's Dissert. 6, part 2, § 7.

It is well known that, under or at the gates of Eastern cities, conversations are held, hospitality to the passing traveller is dispensed, and the most important transactions in commerce are carried on. Hence we hear of Mordorai sitting in the king's gate; and in La. 5:14, that the elders have ceased from the gate; and in Ru. 3:11, "All the gate (that is, house) of my people know that thou art virtuous." We also find Jacob, at an earlier period, saying, "This is the gate of heaven;" and Hezekiah, in Is. 38:10, "I shall go to the gates of the grave;" and our Lord, in Mat. 16:18, thus expressing Himself, "The gates of hell shall not prevail against it." He also uses this similitude when He says, "Enter ye in at the strait gate," &c.

GEMS were originally used in divination, especially among the Egyptians. Diod. Sic. lib. 1, p. 48. Something of this kind is supposed to be meant in the investiture of Joseph by Pharaoh with a ring and chain, Ge. 41:41, &c.; the gold chain, the badge of the chief judge, being for the image of truth, as they called it; and the ring not given to real orders or decrees, but as a magical ring or talisman, to prevent fascinations and delusions, and to divine by.

To keep the Egyptians from the use of magic, to which the Egyptians were much addicted, God ordered a breastplate of judgment to be made for Aaron, in which were to be set, in sockets of gold, twelve precious stones, bearing the names engraven on them of the twelve tribes of Israel. This was to be used as an oracle on great emergencies, and the stones were called Urim, fires or lights, and Thummim, perfections or truth; perfection and truth, in the Scripture style, being synonymous in sense, because what is perfected is truly done, neither false, nor vain, nor yet unexecuted, but accomplished.

The primary notion of alηθεια, truth, seems to be that of revelatio or the discovery of a thing which, being hidden before, is no longer so: τὸ μὴ ληθεῖν, is alηθεῖς, that is, true, which is no more hidden.

See much on the Egyptian divinations in Jamblucus de Mysteriis.

The oracles of God are frequently compared to light or fire; as in Ps. 119:130, and other places.

Christ calls Himself the Light of the world; He is the true Urim and Thummim, the disposer of the oracles of God. Jn. 8:12.

It appears from the manner in which they were anciently used, that gems may be considered as the symbols of judgment and government, and as the symbols of the divine oracles, especially of such as are prophetic; both which they aptly represent, on account of their light, brightness, and sparkling.

It was a saying of a Chinese king, (Moral. Confuc. lib. 2, p. 45,) "I have four ministers of state, who govern with great prudence the provinces I have committed to them: those are my precious stones; they can enlighten a thousand fortresses."

All the Oriental oneirocritics affirm, that precious stones and pearls are the symbols of government; and the Indian Interpreter expressly asserts, that "they are, for the most part, to be interpreted of the divine oracles, and of the wisdom and knowledge of God."

As gems are substances of a permanent or durable nature, the symbols from them are only used about matters of a constant and long duration. Thus, Mat. 13:45,46, "the pearl of great price."

Sometimes the manner of God's appearance is described by images of this kind; as in Ex. 24:10, "He stood upon a paved work of sapphire-stones, and as it were the body of heaven in its clearness;" denoting calmness, serenity, good will.

The colors of gems, white, red, blue, green, are explained by the Indian Interpreter, ch. 247.

There is a beautiful passage in Is. 5:11, &c., where the imagery is taken from gems:

"O thou afflicted, leaven with the storm, destitute of consolation,

Behold I lay thy stones in cement of vermillion,
And thy foundations with sapphires;

And I will make of rubies thy battlements,
And the gates of carbuncles,

And the whole circuit of thy walls shall be of precious stones."

These, as Lowth observes, are general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of the Eastern nations, and to have never been intended to be strictly scrutinized, or minutely explained, particularly explained, as if they had each of them some precise moral or spiritual meaning.

Tobit, in his prophecy of the final restoration of Israel, describes the New Jerusalem in the same Oriental manner: "For Jerusalem shall be built up with sapphires, and emeralds, and precious stones: thy walls, and towers, and battlements, with pure gold. And the streets of Jerusalem shall be paved with beryl, and carbuncle, and stones of Ophir.' Tobit 13: 16,17.

Compare also Re. 21:18-21.

There are several enumerations of gems in Scripture, viz. in Ex. 28:17-20, Ez. 28:13, Re. 21:19, &c.; but it is extremely difficult to decide what their real names are. Rabbi Abraham Ben David thinks those mentioned in Ex. were,—the carnelian, the topaz, the cornamia, the carbuncle, the sapphire, the diamond, the turkois, the jacinth, the onyx, the chrysolite, the emerald, and the jasper.

Those mentioned by Ezekiel are, the ruby, the topaz, the diamond, the beryl, onyx, and jasper, the sapphire, the emerald, and the carbuncle.

Or, according to the Septuagint, the sardius, topaz, emerald, carbuncle, sapphire, and jasper, the figure and agate, amethyst, chrysolite, beryl, and onyx.

For those mentioned in the Revelation, see the passage.

GIRDLE. The symbol of strength, activity, and power.

Thus Jb. 12:18,

'He looseth the bond of kings,
And girdeth the girdle upon their loins.'

By loosing the bond, or band, may be meant, 'depriving them of their strength.' He taketh away their mighty power, which was originally his gift.

So in verse 21,

'He poureth contempt upon princes,
And weakeneth the strength of the mighty.'

Literally, looesthe the girdle.

Is. 23:10, what in our version is, 'there is no more strength,' is, literally, there is no more girdle; though Lowth thinks it refers to the mound that kept in the waters, acting as a girdle to restrain them.

Is. 5:27, 'Nor shall the girdle of their loins be loosed,' i. e. they shall be persons in full vigor and strength.

On which passage Lowth remarks: 'The Eastern people, wearing long and loose garments, were unfit for action or business of any kind, without girding their clothes about them; when their business was finished, they took off their girdles. A girdle, therefore, denotes strength and activity; and to unloose the girdle, is to deprive of strength, to render unfit for action. God promises to unloose the loins of kings before Cyrus. Is. 45:1. The girdle is so essential a part of a soldier's accoutrement, being the last that he puts on to make himself ready for action, that to be girded, ζωνεθαι, with the Greeks, means to be completely armed, and ready for battle. It is used in the same manner by the Hebrews—'Let not him that girdeth himself boast as he that unlooseth his girdle'; that is, triumph before the war is finished.' 1 K. 20:11.

Jb. 30:11, a very obscure passage: 'Because he hath relaxed my cord,' may mean, 'because he hath loosened my girdle,' i. e. he hath weakened my strength; as it is added, 'and afflicted me.' But see Durell on the passage, and Parkhurst on γάρ, ter.

Is. 11:3,

'And righteousness shall be the girdle of his loins,
And faithfulness the cincture of his veins.'

i. e. a zeal for justice, and truth shall make him active and strong in executing the great work which he shall undertake.

Is. 22:21,

'I will strengthen him with thy girdle,
And thy government will I commit to his hands.'

where the latter expression appears to be synonymous to the former, as it often happens in the prophets.

Is. 45:5, 'I will gird thee, though thou hast not known Me'; i. e. I will strengthen thee.

And so, in other places, to gird is the same as to strengthend and to arm.

The oeno-cratics explain a girdle of the principal servant or keeper of the house, who is indeed the strength thereof.

And, according to them, to be girded with a golden girdle, signifies that the person who so dreams, shall arrive, in the middle of his age, to the greatest power and renown, and have a son to succeed him.

Girdles were anciently of very valuable materials; and hence Solomon's virtuous woman is said to make rich girdles, and sell them to the merchant. Pr. 31:24. But John the Baptist wore one of leather, as his type Elijah had done. Mat. 3:4. 2 K. 1:8. Paul's girdle is referred to by Agabus, in Ac. 21:11.

Our Lord prohibits to his disciples the carrying the money in their girdles, Mat. 10:9. Mk. 6:8, which were made into a kind of purse, as is still usual in Eastern countries. The Roman soldiers used the same custom.

Hence, in Horace, qui zonam perdidit, means one who has lost his purse. And in Aulus Gellius, lib. 15, c. 12, C. Graecius is introduced saying,

SYMBOL. DICT. 4

'Cum Roma praefectus sum, Quirites, zonas quis argenti plenas extuli, eas ex provincia inanes retuli'; i. e. those girdles which I carried out full of money when I went from Rome, I have, at my return from the province, brought home empty. See Parkhurst and Wetstein.

The images of the Chaldeans portrayed upon the wall with vermilion, Ez. 23:14, are represented as being girded with girdles upon their loins.

Suidas interprets gōnē by ἀρχὴ, an office, dignity, or authority. And Justinian, Imper. Nov. 12, writes, 'The punishment for contracting an incestuous marriage is confiscation of goods, also banishment, and the taking away of the girdle, if he possesses any, that is, of all his dignity—hoc est universa dignitas.' Hence the old epitaph:

Arbitrio Regum Quesusta Cingula Sunt
Stemmate Precipaces, Vlos Prohibit Clavis.

The girdle is sometimes used as a symbol of union: 'Preserving the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace,'—'charity or love, the bond of perfectness.' In both these passages, there is an allusion to the girdle, which encircles the whole body. The loins bring-girt, is, according to Pier, Hierogl. p. 1, p. 426, the symbol of temperance. Hence the apostolic expressions, 'Gird up the loins of your minds, be sober, and hope to the end,' &c.

In Jer. ch. 13, one of the symbols is, a linen girdle left to rot, which is explained at v. 11 to mean the people of Israel, whom God redeemed of old, and attached to Himself by a special covenant, that as a girdle serveth as an ornament to the wearer, so they should be subservient to the honor of his name. But it is added, 'they would not hearken,' or conform to his intentions; therefore, being polluted with the guilt of their disobedience, they were in that state, and on that very account, to be carried into captivity; conformably to which, the prophet was directed not to put the girdle in water, that is, not to wash it, but to leave it in that filthiness which it had contracted in the wearing.

Among the visions of Daniel, we find one in 10:5, where he sees 'a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz.' The whole description very much resembles that in Re. 1:13, 'One like unto a son of man,' i. e. in the human form, 'cladeth with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the breasts with a golden girdle.'

Diodorus Siculus, b. 17, writes thus of Alexander, εἰτα τοτε Πεπονικός, &c. 'Then he put on the Persian diadem, and clothed himself with a white tunic, with the Persian girdle.'

The seven angels mentioned in Re. 15:6, are described as 'having their breasts girded with golden girdles,' resembling the habit which the high-priest wore when he went into the most holy place, and consulted the oracle.

GLASS; being a brittle substance, is a very suitable emblem of fragility. The oeno-cratics generally consider it to denote a short-lived state. Horace gives the epithet of glass to Fame, b. 2, sat. 3, v. 222.

Glass, also, on account of its transparency, is used as a symbol expressive of beauty. Hor. b. 1, Od. 17, l. 20.

And in the poets waters, fountains, rivers, or seas, are often compared to glass. Hor. b. 3, Od. 13; Virgil, En. b. 7, v. 750.

Mention is made in Re. 4:6, and 15:2, of a sea of glass, like unto crystal, concerning the meaning of which interpreters vary; but it is probably an allusion to the brazen sea spoken of in 1 K. 7:23, and elsewhere, containing water for the priests to wash with, that they might not minister before God under any pollution.

That the ancients understood the art of making the artificial substance called glass, is put beyond all doubt by the writings of Aristotle, Lucretius, and others. See Philo's embassy to Caius Caligula.

Horace has, b. 2, Od. 13,

'O fons blandus splendidior vitro.'

'O thou blandosus spring, more bright than glass.'

And Ovid. Heroid. Ep. 15, line 155,

'Vitreopis magis pellucido amar.'

'Clearer than the glassy stream.'

What is called a glass in 1 Co. 13:12, Ja. 1:21, is properly a mirror; and the ancient mirrors were not of glass, like ours, but of brass, (see Ex. 35:8,) and were consequently liable to spot and rust.

Re. 21:18, 'And the city was pure gold, like unto clear glass,' i. e. it shone with the brightness of crystal.

GOATS; from their offensiveness, mischievous and hideous disposition, &c., are symbols of the wicked, who are, in the day of judgment, to be finally separated from the good. Mat. 25:33.

According to Clarke, 'goats' denote hypocrites; for goats were clean both for sacrifice and for food.' Mat. 24:51.

But goats sometimes signify princes, as in Zech. 10:3, where Newcome translates, 'the chief ones.' See Is. 14:9; and the Chaldean word equivalent to principes.

GOG AND MAGOG. These names occur only in Ez. 38:2, &c., 39:11, and Re. 20:8.

They seem to be taken allegorically for such princes and powers as are, in the last days, to unite to persecute the church of God, and to oppose the new order of things which is to follow the destruction of the beast and the false prophet.

We learn from Ge. 10:2, that Magog was the second son of Japhet.

Ezekiel uses Magog for the country of which Gog was prince.

Michaelis compares the word Gog with Kak, or Chak, the general name of kings among the ancient Turks, Moguls, Tartars, Catians, and Chinese, (Spir. Geog. p. 34) and thinks that Magog denotes those vast tracts of country to the north of India and China, which the Greeks called Scythia, and we, Tartary. The Turks are generally allowed to be of Scythian origin. Scythopolis and Hierapolis, which the Scythians took when they overcame Syria, were ever after by the Syrians called Magog. See Plin. h. 5, c. 23; Mude's Disc. 50, p. 280. The Arabs call the Chinese wall, 'Sud Yagog et Magog,' that is, Agger Gog et Magog, or the Mount of Gog and Magog. See Hyde's Works by Sharpe, ii. 426.

The Scythians ruled over Media for twenty-two years, before they were expelled from that country by Cyaxares, early in the reign of Zedekiah. After their expulsion, Nebuchadnezzar assisted in invading them. It follows, that at this time they were a remarkable people on the theatre of the world. See Newcome on Ezekiel.

Gog is called the 'prince of Rhos, Meshach, and Tubal.'

Rhos is understood of a people by the Septuagint, Symmachus, Theodotion, and Houbigant. Bochart shows that the river Araxes was called Rhos; whence the Russi, who seem to have first settled in Taurica Chersonesus. Geogr. b. 3, c. 13.

Tubal and Meshech were sons of Japhet. Ge. 10:2. The people called Tubareni, and Moschi, are probably here meant, who are generally mentioned together, and were situated towards mount Caucasus. See Bochart, Michælis, and Newcome.

There is reason to believe, that what is now read Azog in Nu. 24:7, is a corruption, and should be read Gog, as in the Septuagint versions, the Samaritan text, and the Greek text of Symmachus (see Pol. Syn. in loc.) and it is likely that, in the days of Moses, this was the common name of the princes of some powerful people; so powerful, that to say, the king of Israel, meaning David, or rather the Messiah, should be higher than Gog, or exalted, over Gog, was to say every thing expressive of power and of extensive dominion. Hence the chief of the host, who, in the latter days, is to come from the same quarter against the land of Israel, is thus denominated. The very name also might become proverbial.

In the Koran, ch. xviii., Gog and Magog are said to waste the land, and a wall is mentioned which Gog and Magog could not scale, neither could they dig through it. They are also mentioned in ch. xxi.; but nothing is said to convey an idea what persons or people were understood by these names. It is not improbable that Mahomet borrowed these, and many other allusions, from the sacred writings, in order to give his pretended revelations a greater resemblance to genuine Scripture.

It is probable, according to the notion of the Arabians, that Gog and Magog formerly inhabited the mountains of the Hyperboreans, and that they were known to the ancients by this name. This nation is unquestionably famous in antiquity, and there is reason for imagining, that they were some of the Scythians, and concealed among the Great and Little Tartars, and perhaps among the Muscovites and other northern people. See Well's Geogr. vol. i. p. 160; Rees's Cyclop., and Calmet's Dict., article Gog.

The Gog and Magog of Revelation cannot be literally understood of the nations so called in the Old Testament; for there Gog the prince, with the people of Magog, came out of the north parts, where the posterity of Magog was seated; but the Gog and Magog of the Apocalypses are said to be nations which are in the four quarters of the earth. As, therefore, the Apocalyptic Babylon is not Babylon in Chaldea, but a counter type thereof, so the Apocalyptic Gog and Magog are not the Gog and Magog of the North, but a counter type of them.

Mede supposes them to be the Turks, in which, perhaps, he includes in general the Mahometan powers; and referring to the prophets alluded to in Ez. 38:17, he thinks the following passages are meant, viz. Is. 27:1, with the two last verses of the 29th chapter; Jer. 30:23,24; Jo. 3:1, &c. Mi. 5:5,6,9,15; in all which places mention is made of some terrible enemy who should come against Israel, at the time of their return, whom the Lord should destroy with a hideous and dreadful slaughter. Newcome is of opinion, that the predictions of the prophets on this subject, referred to by Ezekiel, were never committed to writing, or are now lost.

Mede also thinks that Gog is the power meant by Micah under the name of the Assyrian, not as though this were his original name, but as the province from whence he should invade the land of Israel.

Lowman considers these nations of Gog and Magog to be a very proper figurative description of the enemies of true religion, and its faithful professors.

Pyle supposes them to mean remote heathen nations, prompted by envy and desire of plunder, who shall be permitted to invade the Christian territories in vast bodies and armies.

Shuckford thinks that the country round Aleppo is the land of Magog, once called Hierapolis, but more anciently Magog, as Pliny asserts, and Maimonides in Hilothotheromot, c. 1, § 9, and that the lands of Meschesh and Tubal were adjacent to it. See Bp. Newton on the Prophecies, vol. ii. p. 347, and Daubuz, p. 574.

GOLD is the symbol of the great value, the duration, the incorruptibility, and the strength of the subject to which it is applied.

Thus, Is. 13:12,

'I will make a man more precious than fine gold,
Yea, a man than the rich ore of Ophir.'

La. 4:2,

'The precious sons of Sion, of worth equal to the forest gold,
How are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the manufacture of the potter!'

So in 2 Ti. 2:20, vessels of gold, as being precious, are opposed to vessels of wood and earth.

RICHES are the strength of a man. Pr. 18:11,

'The rich man's wealth is his strong city,
And as a high wall about his habitation.'

For power and riches go together, and are akin in the way of the world. And hence gold symbolically signifies power, as well as riches.

Agreeably to this, the Phoenicians represented their gods with purses of gold, as the symbol of their power. Suidas, v. Ἐργῆν. Thus, also, poteus is rich, Quint. Inst. b. 6, c. 3, and impotens is poverty. Terence, Ad. act. 4, sc. 3.

Gold denotes spiritually the redeeming merits of Christ. Re. 3:18, 'I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich.' Though others interpret it of being rich in good works before God.

In 1 Co. 3:12, it seems to denote sincere believers, built into the Christian church, who will stand the fiery trial.

Jb. 36:19,

'Will he esteem thy riches?
Not gold, nor all the forces of strength.'

Or rather, as Durell renders it,

'Not gold, nor all the powers of wealth.'

Da. 2:38, 'Thou art this head of gold.'

The Babylonian empire is so called, on account of its great riches; and Babylon was called by Isaiah, as in our version, 'the golden city,' 14:4; but more properly, 'the exactress of gold.'

Ez. 12:6, 'or the golden bowl be broken.'

Some explain this of the human head or skull, which resembles a bowl in form.

Re. 4:4, 'the elders,' and 9:7, 'the locusts, had on their heads crowns of gold.'

In the costume of the East, a linen turban, with a gold ornament, was reckoned a crown of gold, and is so called in the language of Scripture, Le. 8:9. In the case of the Mahometan Arabs, who are, in all probability, here represented by locusts, they were accustomed to wear ornaments on their heads like crowns or mitres.

And the Romish or antichristian Babylon is exceedingly described under the figure of a female, decked with gold and precious stones and pearls, having a golden cup in her hand, Re. 17:4; and in Re. 18:16, the city, or mystic Babylon, is represented by the same terms.

Re. 14:14, 'having on his head a golden crown.'

The ensign of royalty and sovereign power is here applied to Jesus Christ.

GRAPES. Independently of their literal meaning, it is plain, from more than one passage of Scripture, that they are used in a figurative sense. As, for instance, in Re. 14:18, 'Gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe; i. e. the appointed time for the execution of divine vengeance is come, and the iniquities of the inhabitants of the earth have made them fully ripe for destruction.'

In Mi. 7:1, it is also used figuratively, as well expressed by Newcome in his note on the place: 'As the early fig of excellent flavor cannot be found in the advanced season of summer, or the choice cluster of grapes after vintage; so neither can the good and upright man be discovered by diligent searching in Israel. This comparison is beautifully implied.'

So, in Jer. 6:9,

'They shall thoroughly glean as a vine the relics of Israel. Turn again thine hand, like a grape-gatherer, unto the baskets.'

an address to the Chaldeans, exhorting them to return and pick up those few inhabitants that were left before, like the grape-gleanings, and to carry them also into captivity. The Chaldeans do this, as may be seen, 59:28,29,30.

And in Jer. 49:9, the meaning is, that when the enemy came to spoil, they should meet with no interruption, but should glean quite clean, and leave nothing behind through haste.

Ez. 18:2, 'The fathers have eaten sour grapes, and the children's teeth are set on edge.' A proverbial expression, explained by the Chaldee, 'The fathers have sinned, and the sons are smitten.' In the second commandment, it is expressly declared, that the children should be punished in this life for the idolatry of the fathers. Idolatry was high-treason while the theocracy subsisted, and was to be restrained by the severest sanctions, under a dispensation appointed for these, among other wise purposes, to preserve the Israelites from the general taint of idolatry, and to maintain and propagate the knowledge of the one God. The general principle of the law cannot be better explained than in the words of Cicero, Ep. ad Brutum, 19.—'Hoc praeclare legibus comparatum est, ut carnem theorum amictores parentes reipublicam redderent.'

In the destruction by the Babylonians, the good were to escape, Ez. 9:4,6; but they were only to deliver themselves, 14:14,20,21. Whenever the children had suffered temporal evils for the idolatry of their fathers, they had justly incurred a punishment solemnly denounced. With respect to the impending calamity from Nebuchadnezzar, God's purpose was to observe another rule of conduct. Newcome.

GRASS. As trees signify princes, nobles, and rich men, so, by the rule of analogy, grass must signify the common people.

And in Scripture, men are compared to grass, as in 1 Pe. 1:21; 1 Th. 4:6,7.

In 1 Co. 3:12, hay or grass is applied figuratively to persons.

Re. 8:7, 'And all green grass was burnt up,' descriptive of the effects of those calamities which fell upon the Roman empire, by which the lower orders (the grass) suffered, as well as the higher orders (the trees).

Re. 9:1, 'that they should not hurt the grass of the earth.'

The natural locusts hurt every green thing and prey upon it as their food; but these figurative locusts were under restrictions. It is generally explained of the rise of the Mahometan power; and it is very singular, that Abu-beker gave orders 'not to destroy palm-trees, nor burn any fields of corn, and to cut down no fruit-trees,' which seems to identify the Saracens with these mystic locusts.

See Ockley's History of the Saracens.

H.

HAIL is the symbol of the divine vengeance upon kingdoms and nations, the enemies of God and of his people. And as a hail-storm is generally accompanied by lightning, and seems to be produced by a certain electrical state of the atmosphere, so we find in Scripture hail and fire, i. e. lightning, mentioned together. Thus, in Ex. 9:33, 'And the Lord sent thunder and hail, and the fire ran along the ground, and the Lord rained hail upon the land of Egypt.'

Jb. 38:22,23,

'Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow,
Or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail,
Which I have reserved against the day of trouble,
Against the day of battle and war?'

Ps. 105:32, referring to God's plagues on Egypt,

'He gave them hail for rain,
And flaming fire in their land.'

Ps. 78:48, treating of the same subject, has,

'He gave up their cattle also to the hail,
And their flocks to hot thunderbolts.'

Ps. 118:8, they are linked together thus —

'Fire and hail, and snow, and vapor,
Stormy wind, fulfilling his word.'

And the like in Ps. 18:13,

'The Lord also thundered in the heavens,
And the Most High gave forth his voice,
Hailstones and coals of fire.'

In Is. 28:2, a passage relating to the Israelites, and which denounces their approaching destruction by Shalmaneser, the same images are employed. Hail is mentioned as a divine judgment by the prophet Haggai, 2:17. The destruction of the Assyrian army is thus pointed out in Is. 30:30,

'And Jehovah shall cause his glorious voice to be heard,
And the lighting down of his arm to be seen,
With his indignation, and a flame of consuming fire,
With a violent storm, and rushing showers, and hailstones.'

Ezekiel, 13:11, represents the wall dashed with untempered mortar, as being destroyed by great hailstones. And in his prophecy against Gog, he thus expresses himself, 38:22, 'And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood,
And with an overflowing shower and great hailstones,
Tire and brimstone will I rain upon him.'

a prediction which probably remains to be accomplished on the future enemies of the Jews, Gog and Magog, Re. 20:9, when his people are reinstated in God's favor, of which enemies it is there said, 'And fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them.'

The hail and fire mingled with blood, mentioned in Re. 8:7, are supposed to denote the commotions that took place in the Roman empire during the reigns of Jovian, Valentine, Valens, and Gratian, during which the empire suffered great calamities, and many bloody battles took place from the year 363 to 379. Claudian has well expressed the misery of those times, to his son Honorius, as quoted by Lowman,

'Omnibus afflictis, et vel fabentibus ita,
Vel prope casuris, unus tota contra,
Restitit, ex quoque facie, agricola Colonos,
Restitit, et Leu rapuit de faucebus urbe,
Nulla relicta foet, Romani nominis umbra,
Ni Pater ille tuus, janjam ritura subiectus, Pondera,' &c.

It is a just observation of Sir Isaac Newton, that 'in the prophetic language, tempests, winds, or the motions of clouds, are put for wars; thunder, or the voice of a cloud, for the voice of a multitude; and storms of thunder, lightning, hail, and overflowing rain, for a tempest of war, descending from the heavens and clouds politie.'

In reference to the period, supposed to be predicted in Re. 8:7, Philoxorus, after mentioning numerous calamities which men were exposed to, adds, — 'Also there were inundations of rain waters, and in some places dashes of flames, and sometimes whirlwinds of fire, which produced various and intolerable torments. Yea, and hail bigger than a man's fist, or greater than a man could hold in his hand, did fall in many places, weighing as far as eight pounds.'

The great hail, in Re. 11:19, denotes great and heavy judgments on the enemies of true religion; and the grievous storm, in 10:21, represents something similar, probably still future, and far more severe.

The Hebrew term for hailstone, algebish, from gelish, a gem or crystal, with the Arabic article prefixed, i. e. hailstones of gems, or hailstones as large as gems, is thought by Parkhurst to refer to some idolatrous notion the Jews entertained about hail. 'It is certain,' he says, 'that the latter heathen attributed the sending of hail to their Jupiter, and looked upon any remarkable showers of it as proofs of his anger.' See Horace, Odes, 2, lib. 1,

'Jum satis terribilis nivis, atque dira
Grandinis misit Pater,' &c.

'Too low & alas, with storms of hail and snow,
Jove has chastised the world below.'

Maymoring.

Comp. Virgil, Aen. 4, lin. 120, 161; Aen. 9, lin. 699, and Livy, b. 2, cap. 12, and b. 26, cap. 11. Spence, in his Polyments, gives us a medal, on which Jupiter Pluvius, or the Rain, is represented seated on the clouds, holding up his right hand, and pouring a stream of hail and rain from it upon the earth, whilst his fulmen is held down in his left.

According to Achmet and the interpreters of dreams, hail, snow, and the like, portend anxieties and torments, or some sudden attack of an enemy. And when the hail injures or destroys heaps of corn or barley, then hostile invasions and slaughter may be expected.

Pindar and Demosthenes apply it to a like purpose; the latter of whom compares the progress of king Philip to a storm of hail.

Is. 32:19, is thus rendered by Lowth —

'But the hail shall fall, and the forest be brought down,
And the city shall be laid level with the plain.'

The city, says the bishop, is probably Nineveh or Babylon; but this verse is very obscure. Ephraim Syrus supposes the forest to be the kingdom of the Assyrians, and the city, their extensive camps. And so conjectured Archibishop Secker, referring to Zeh. 11:2.

Glassius thinks that the world in general is here described; the prophet by forest and city meaning the uncultivated and the habitable parts; and that, while it should tremble and shake under calamities, the godly should be preserved from them all.

HAIR. White hair, or the hoary head, is the symbol of the respect due to age. Ex. 19:22,

'Thou shall rise up before the hoary head,

And honor the face of the old man.'

And Solomon says, Pr. 16:31,

'The hoary head is a crown of glory,

If it be found in the way of righteousness.'

Hence we find in Da. 7:9, God takes upon him the title of 'Ancient of Days.'

The hoary head is the symbol of authority and honor. All the interpreters agree in this.

The shaving of the head, on the contrary, signifies affliction, poverty, and disgrace. Thus, in Is. 7:20, 'The shaving the head, the hair of the feet, and the beard, by a hired razor,' the king of Assyria, denotes the troubles, slaughter, and destruction to be brought upon the Jews by the Assyrian armies. The hairs of the head, are those of the highest order in the state; those of the feet, or the lower parts, are the common people; the beard is the king, the high-priest, the very supreme in dignity and majesty. The Eastern people have always held the beard in the highest veneration, and have been extremely jealous of its honor. To pluck a man's beard is an instance of the greatest indignity that can be offered. See Lowth in loc.

Hence, also, in Jer. 47:5, baldness is destruction.

Is. 15:2, 'On every head there is baldness, and every beard is shorn.'

Herodotus, ii. 36, speaks of it as a general practice among all men, except the Egyptians, to cut off their hair as a token of mourning. 'Cut off thy hair, and cast it away,' says Jeremiah, 7:29, 'and take up a lamentation.'

And Homer, in his Odyssey, 4, 197, as translated by Pope,

'The rites of woe

Are all, alas, the living can bestow;

Of her congenial dust enjoined to shear

The graceful curl, and drop the tender tear.'

A Nazarite was one who, by a special vow, had separated himself, or set himself apart for a time, from all worldly connections, to attend upon the service of God only. Nu. 6:2. Under these circumstances he was to let the hair of his head grow, verse 5; and when the days of his vow were fulfilled, he was then to shave his head at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, verse 18, in a solemn and public manner, to notify that he was no longer in his former state of separation.

Forster, in his Observations, p. 560, speaks of the hair cut off and thrown upon the bier, at Otaheite; and at the Friendly Islands, it is expressly said, that cutting off the hair is one of their mourning ceremonies. Cook's Voyage, vol. i. p. 112. This was forbidden by the Mosaic law, as well as cutting the flesh, at the same time, and on the same principles. The hair is the natural ornament of the head, and the loss of it a considerable defect in the human figure. It was therefore not to be voluntarily assumed by those whose profession obliged them to 'worship Jehovah in the beauty of holiness.' At what time the observance of the law in these particulars began to be relaxed does not appear; but there are no traces of such customs among God's chosen people earlier than those which are alluded to in the prophetic books, properly so-called. See Blayney.

'Hairs, as the hair of women?' Re. 9:8.

This is part of the description of the apocalyptic locusts; it may either denote the greatness, length, and fineness of the hair, the symbol of honor and authority; or else, that the hair is dressed up and plaited after the manner of women, as was the way of the Saracens. And therefore those of the sect of Ali, to distinguish themselves, had not only a turban made after a particular fashion, but they also twisted their hair after a manner quite different from the rest of the Mussulmans. Herbelot, title Ali.

Dressing the hair in this manner, is the symbol of luxury and effeminacy; and therefore it is forbidden to Christian women, as being the practice of the heathens, and the dress of harlots, in 1 Pe. 3:3; 1 Ti. 2:9.

And not only in women, but more particularly in men, is the said practice condemned in holy writ, as in 1 Co. 11:11, where the word κυνίζειν signifies hair studiously dressed, as we men are wont to do with theirs.

Persius, Sat. 4, 1, 1, calls Socrates barbatus magister. Philosophers were so styled by way of honor and distinction; for cutting off the beard was a punishment and a mark of disgrace, as we learn from the 13th book of Atheneus.

HAND. Hands are the symbols of human action; pure hands are pure actions; unjust hands are deeds of injustice; hands full of blood, actions stained with cruelty, and like. Ps. 90:17. Jih. 9:30; 1 Ti. 2:8. Is. 1:15. And so Herodian, describing a homicide, calls him 'a man of impure hands.' lib. 1.

And Seneca, Herc. Jur. act. 5, says, 'Nullum mare, nulla thymna dextram aliter posse sceleris sanguineque contaminant.'

Euripides, in Orest., says, 'δύρος γαρ επει επταπτάς' for I am of pure hands.

Washing of the hands was the symbol of innocence. Ps. 26:6.

'I will wash my hand in innocence.'

'And I will encompass thine altar, Jehovah.'

Ps. 73:12,

'I have purified my heart in vain,

'And washed my hands in innocence.'

Of Pilate furnishes an example, Mat. 27:24, where, taking water, he washes his hands, and says, 'I am innocent of the blood of this just man; see ye to it.'

Washing the hands was used as a symbol of initiation. Hence Ovid says, Fasti, lib. 4,

'Tu conversus ad aras,

Die quater et vivo perire rura manus.'

And Prudentius,

'De ore fontana absum

Manus et os et lumina,

Patetaque fac sacrum.'

Litgovius observes, that the ruins of a temple are found in Crete, on the door of which is this inscription —

'Cleanse your feet, wash your hands, and then enter.'

Such rites, perhaps, the Savior alludes, Ju. 3:5, 'Verily, verily I say unto you, Unless a man be born of water and of the Spirit, he cannot enter into the Kingdom of God.'

And Paul, in He. 10:23, 'Let us draw near,' &c., having our body cleansed pure water.' And Ja. 4:8, 'Draw nigh to God, and He will draw nigh to you; cleanse your hands, ye sinners, and purify your hearts, ye double-minded.'

Washing of hands was a symbol of eruption, as might be shown by numerous references; and of sanctification, as appears from several passages. 1 Co. 6:11. Is. 1:16. Ps. 24:3, 4. For all the ablutions of the Old Testament prefigured nothing else than the sanctification of the church of God, and hence, Ep. 5:26, it is said, 'Christ gave Himself for it, that He might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word,' &c. And Paul, in 1 Ti. 2:8, says, 'I will therefore that men pray every where, lifting up holy hands,' &c. See Jb. 11:13, 14.

It was the custom of the Jews to wash their hands before and after meat. See Mk. 7:3, Mat. 6:2. Lu. 11:38. A Jewish author writes thus: 'He who wishes to eat food, for the sake of which prayer is to be said, let him pour water on his hands, although he is conscious of no impurity in them, and at the same time let him recite the customary benediction on pouring the water on his hands.'

Plautus mentions the custom, in Pers. act. 1, sc. 5,

'Hoc age, accombe,

DATE SQAM MAMMIS APPARE MENSAM.'

The object of these ceremonies was to recall to the mind that all gifts for the sustenance of the body proceed from God, and are to be received with pure and holy mind, as Paul teaches, 1 Co. 10:31, 'Whether ye eat or drink, or whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God.' And in 2 Co. 7:1, 'Let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God.' And what water effects outwardly, the blood of Christ is said to effect inwardly, 'purging the conscience from dead works.' He. 9:13, 14. And as unclean persons are not admitted into the company of their superiors, so it is said, 'Without holiness no man shall see the Lord.' He. 12:14. 'He that hath this hope in him, purifieth himself, even as God is pure.' 1 Jn. 3:3.

Hand, in general, is the symbol of power and strength; and the right hand more particularly so.

To hold by the right hand, is the symbol of protection and favor. Ps. 18:35.

The expression in Mk. 16:19, 'He sat at the right hand of God,' is equivalent to the expression in Mk. 14:30, 'He sat at the right hand of Power', meaning that divine power and authority are communicated to Christ.

So the right hand of fellowship, Ga. 2:9, signifies a communication of the same power and authority.

To give the hand, as to a master, is the token of submission and future obedience. Thus in Ch. 308, the words in the original, 'Give the hand into the Lord,' signify, yield yourselves unto the Lord. The like phrase is used in Ps. 65:3, 1a. La. 5:6.

And thus in Horace, Epod. 17, to give hands, is to submit, or to yield one's self a slave, as it is explained by the commentator.

To lift up the right hand to heaven, was the sign used in swearing. Ge. 14:22. Ex. 6:8. Nu. 14:30. De. 32:10. Ez. 20:5, 6. Da. 12:7.

Marks in the hands or wrists were the tokens of servitude; the heathens being wont to imprint marks upon the hands of servants, and on such as devoted themselves to some false deity. Thus, in Zeh. 13:6, 'One shall say to him,

'What are these marks (or punctures) in thine hands? And he shall say, Those with which I have been stricken in the house of my friends.'

The man, when challenged for the scars visible on his hands, would deny them to have proceeded from an idolatrous cause, and pretend that they were the effects of the wounds he had given himself for the loss of his friends.

The right hand stretched out, is the symbol of immediate exertion of power. Ex. 15:12.

The right hand, or the hands laid upon a person, are the symbol of a conveyance or transmission of blessings, strength, and power, or authority. Ge. 48:14-20. Da. 10:10. Nu. 27:18. God was wont to give this honor to his prophets, or to bestow his gifts upon others at their prayers, of which imposition of hands was a symbol. So Moses laid his hands on Joshua. Nu. 27:18. Naaman joins calling on God's name with laying on of hands. 2 K. 5:11. Calvin says, 'Let us remember that the laying on of hands was the instrument of God, at the time when he gave the visible graces of his Spirit to his people. But since the church has been deprived of such riches, to wit, the visible graces of his Spirit, laying on of hands would be but an unprofitable image.'

The hand of God upon a prophet, signifies the immediate operation of his Holy Spirit on the soul or body of the prophet, as in 1 K. 18:46, 2 K. 3:15. Ez. 13: 3, 22, 8, 1. And as the hand, so also the finger of God denotes this power or spirit. See Lu. 11:20, and compare Mat. 12:28. Thus our Savior cast out devils or demons by his bare command; whereas the Jews cast them out only by the invocation of the name of God. And so in Ex. 8:19, the finger of God is a work which none but God could perform.

And thus the expression in Ex. 31:18, of the two tables being written with the finger of God, seems to denote that letters were then first given; that the giving of them was a work of God's design and contrivance, so proper to Him as not to be done by any other. The invention of expressing articulate sounds by characters, seems to exceed the reach of human wit; language and writing must both have been of divine suggestion. Eupolemus says, that Moses was the first wise man who taught the Phoenicians received it from them, and the Greeks from the Phoenicians.

HARP. Harps or guitars are constantly, in the Holy Scriptures, instruments of joy. They are mentioned in very ancient times as musical instruments, used both by Jews and Gentiles; and their employment in the temple worship frequently occurs. Moses has named their original inventor in Ge. 4:21, viz. Jubal; and in Ge. 31:27, Laban says to Jacob, 'Why did you not tell me, that I might have sent you away with mirth and songs, with tablet and harp?' And in that very ancient writing, the book of Job, 21:12, that patriarch, speaking of the prosperity of the wicked, says, 'They take the timbrel and harp, and rejoice at the sound of the organ.' And when complaining of his own condition, 30:31, he says, 'My harp also is turned into mourning, and my organ to the voice of them that weep.' Isaiah speaks of the harp under the same character, as an instrument of joy, 24:8.

'The joyful sound of the taber casseth;

'The noise of exultation is no more;

'The joyful sound of the harp ceaseth.'

Divine subjects used to be brought forward with the accompaniments of the harp. Thus, Ps. 43:5,

'I will incline mine ear to a parable;

'I will open my dark saying upon the harp.'

And that the high praises of God were so celebrated, there are numerous testimonies, Ps. 33:2,

'Praise Jehovah with the harp.'

Ps. 63:4,

'On the harp will I praise thee, O God, my God.'

Ps. 57:8,

'Awake up, my glory; awake, psaltery and harp;

'I myself will awake early.'

See also Ps. 71:22, 23. 92:4, 5, 6. 98:5. 117:7, 150:3.

That harps are used to celebrate the praises of heroes, is well known.

Thus Homer, Iliad 9th,

'Amused at ease, the godlike man they found,

'Please with the solemn harp's harmonious sound,

'(The well-won) harp from conquered Thebe came,

'Of polished silver was its costly frame.)

With this he another his angry soul, and sings

'Th' immortal deods of heroes and of kings.'

Page.

And Ammianus Marcellinus says, ‘Bardi quidem fortis virorum illustrum facta heroicis composita versibus cum dulcibus lyra modulis cantatnr.’ And hence the harp is put by Proterius for singing and celebrations, b. 2, El. 10,

‘Nunc vole subdico gravior procedere volo,
Nunc aliam citharam mea Musa docet.’

Harpes, in Solomon's day, were made of the alming-tree, as our translators have it, 1 K. 10: 11,12, which appears to have been ebony, brought from India, as Ewaldus observes; but Josephus calls it the pitch or torch tree. They were often gilded, and hence called golden harps, Re. 5:8. So Virgil, Aen. 1, ‘cithara crinitus Jove’

Personal aurea?

Theocritus, in Idyll., speaks of harps of bu- tree, and Aristophanes of ivory harps. Lucian describes the form of the ancient harp, in his dialogues of the gods: ‘Mercury found a tortoise-shell somewhere, which he formed into an instrument, adapting pins to it, and laying bars, then fixing reeds, and covering it over, and applying to it seven strings, he made most exquisite harmony.’ Χελώνης κέρας τύπος,
κ. τ. λ. Harps of eight strings are mentioned,
1 Ch. 15:21; called in our version, ‘Harps on the Sheinim.’ But amongst the Greeks, it had for most part seven strings. Thus Eur-ipides, in Jon. v. 881, ‘Ο θοι who sweetly playest on the seven-stringed harp?’ Josephus, Antiq. b. 7, c. 12, describes a harp of ten strings. The distinct sounds uttered by these strings or chords, are alluded to by Paul, in 1
Co. 14:7. Its soothing effect was exemplified in calming down the furious spirit of Saul, 1
S. 16:17,21. 18:9,19. The spirit of prophecy appears to have been exerted by instrumental music of this kind, 2 K. 3:15. Harpers held the instrument in the hand, or placed it on a pillar, or sat down by a river side; whence Ovid Fasti, h. 2, v. 115,

‘Hie solens citharaque tenuit, prethympe vobendi
Cantat, et sequens canitque nuncit aquas.’

Sometimes they suspended them from trees, to which there is an allusion in Ps. 137:1,2,

*By the rivers of Babylon we sat and wept,
When we remembered Zion;

On the willows in the midst of it we hanged our harps.’

The harp was used in processions and public triumphs, in worship and the offices of religion, and was sometimes accompanied with dancing.
See Ps. 149:3. Euripides also uses the harp and the dance together, Iphig. v. 1037, and Homer, Odys. b. 8, and Theognis, &c.

They were also used after successful battles;
see 2 Ch. 20:28; Mat. 13:51. Isaiah alludes to this custom, 30:32.

*Wherover the rod of correction shall pass,
Which Jehovah shall lay heavily upon him,
It shall be accompanied with talents and harps,
And with fierce battles shall He fight against them;’

i. e. as Lowth observes, ‘With every demonstration of joy and thanksgiving, for the destruction of the enemy in so wonderful a manner; with hymns of praise, accompanied with musical instruments.’ See verse 29. So, in the victory of the Lamb, Re. 14:1,2, ‘I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps;’—the church in heaven being represented as composing a grand ihortus, in celebration of the triumphs of the Redeemer.

The heathen had the same customs, as appears from many authors, and Buleng de Triumphis, cap. 30, ‘President triumphant Imperator lictores, tunicae punicies amicti, chorus citharistorum et Satyrorum Hetruscarum pompe ritu cinctorum, ornamentorumque co-ruscans aureis.’

At solemn feasts, and especially of the nuptial kind, harps were employed. To this the prophet Isaiah alludes, 5:11,12, where he says, ‘Woe to them that rise early in the morning to follow strong drink;

Who sit late in the evening, that wine may inflame them;
And the lyre on the harp, the tabor and the pipe;

And wine are their entertainments;

But the work of Jehovah they regard not;

And the operation of his hands they do not perceive.’

Homer mentions the custom, in Iliad 24, and Odyssey, b. 23.

That harps were used in worship, has been already adverted to; and that the heathen employed them on such occasions appears from Da. 3:5,7,15. Virgil refers to the custom in
Aen. b. 6,

‘Nec nos Thracios longa cum vestis sacerdos,’ &c.
‘The Thracian bard, surrounded by the rest;

There stands conspicuous in his flowing vest;

His flying fingers and harmonious quill;

Strike seven distinguished notes, and seven at once they fill.’ Dryden.

Also Theognis, In Sentent. v. 735, φορεῖται
‘αφθεγγός κ. τ. λ.’ Again the harp or pipe sounds forth a sacred melody, while we appear to the gods with libations.’

Bocchus observes, vol. i. p. 729, it is probable that the Greeks used the harp chiefly on mournful occasions, whereas, among the Hebrews, playing on the harp was a sign of joy.

But, on examining the Greek writers, this remark does not appear to be well founded, for the harp is found to have been employed similarly among both nations; and Tsochart rests his observations chiefly on the term κινύψα, as referring to lamentation.

Ammianus makes a distinction between κινύψα and κιλαπόδος. The former is one who only plays; the latter, one who both sings and plays. It is the latter term which is used in Re. 14:2, 18:22.

Harps of God, Re. 15:2, are either a He-braism to show their excellency, as the addition of God often signifies, (the most excellent things in their kind being in the Scriptures said to be of God,) as, a prince of God, Ge. 36:6 in the original; the mountains of God, Ps. 36:6 in the original; cedar of God, Ps. 80:14, orig.; and the like.

Or else they mean, harps given as from God.
Or, harps of God may be harps used in the service of God, in opposition to harps common and profane. 1 Ch. 16:42, 2 Ch. 7:6.

HARVEST is put for a time of destruction,
Ho. 6:11, according to Newcome; but, according to Horsey, for a time of mercy. ‘Observe,’ says he, ‘that the reverie is always an image of the season of judgment; but the harvest, of the ingathering of the objects of God's final mercy.’ To reconcile these two opposite views, we have only to attend to the definition of harvest given by Mede. ‘The harvest,’ says
Mede, ‘includes three things,—the reaping, the gathering in, and the grinding; from whence it generally has a twofold meaning in parabolic writings,—that of slaughter and destruction, equivalent to reaping and grinding; that of restoration and safety, under the image of gathering in.’ Of this there is an example in Jer. 51:33,

‘The daughter of Babylon is as a threshing-floor,
The time of her threshing, yet a little while,
And the time of her harvest is come.’

plainly referring to the judgments of God upon Babylon.

So in the oracle concerning Damascus, Is.
17:5, it is said,

‘It shall be as when one gathereth the standing harvest,
And his arm reapeth the ears of corn;

Or as when one gathereth ears in the valley of Rephaim;’

i. e., as Lowth observes, the king of Assyria shall sweep away the whole body of the people, as the reaper strippeth off the whole crop of corn, and the remnant shall be no more in proportion than the scattered ears left to the gleaner.

Jo. 3:13,

‘Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe;
Come, get ye down, for the wine-press is full, the vats overflow,

For their wickedness is great.’

The last words explain the figurative language which precedes. They are ripe for excision. The Chaldee paraphrases this passage well, thus:

‘Draw out the sword against them; the time of their end is come;

Tread upon it mighty men slain, as men tread upon what is in the wine-press;

Slain their blood, because their wickedness is multiplied.’

The same comparison is used in Re. 14:13, 15,18, where the person referred to as executing vengeance is Jesus Christ Himself, though angels assist in the execution, to show, as Lowman notes, that this stroke of vengeance on Rome is with all the force of divine hand.
It is executed on orders brought by an angel from the temple, or presence of God, from the temple which is in heaven, v. 17.

The harvest, in agricultural reckoning, is considered to be the end of the season, being the time appointed for gathering in the fruits of the earth, and finishing the labors of the year.
So, in Mat. 13:39, our Lord says, ‘The harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels.’

In Mat. 9:36, our Lord, seeing multitudes coming to hear Him, remarks, ‘The harvest truly is plenteous;’ i. e. many are willing to receive instruction. This was spoken at the feast of tabernacles, which was in harvest.

Homer, II. 1. v. 67, compares men falling thick in battle, to corn falling in ranks, in the harvest. And the Indian Interpreter says, ‘If a king dreams that he sees harvest reaped in his own country, he will soon hear of a slay-ing of his people.’

The metaphor of mowing or reaping is used in most authors, to signify an excision or utter destruction of the subject. So Horace and Virgil used it; Hor. b. 4, od. 14; Aen. b.
v. 513. And in Homer, mowing is a symbol of war; the straw signifies the slain, and the crop or corn, those that escape. II. 1. v. 221.

But harvest is also used in a good sense; as in
Mat. 9:37, Lnt. 10:2, Jn. 4:35.

And so in Jer. 8:20, ‘The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved;’ i. e.
the time in which we expected to be saved, is past.

HATE. See under LOVE.

HEAD, in general, as being the governing part of man, always implies rule; and therefore the symbols about the head must show the qualities and extent of the power rule.

The head of a people, signifies their king or chief governor.

The heads of a people, their princes or magistrates.

To have a great head, portends principality and empire.

For the hair of the head, see HAIR.

Christ is called the head over all things to the church. Ep. 1:23, &c. The apostle, in this passage, seems to have respect to the famous statue of Diana, who was the great goddess of these Ephesians. Her image was that of a woman, and her body covered or filled with the breasts of a woman, to denote, as Jerome tells us, ‘that she was the nurse, supporter, and life of all living creatures;’ or, as Macrobius informs us, Saturn, b. 1, c. 20. ‘She represented the earth or nature, by whose nourishment the whole universe is supported.’ Now, this gives a beautiful turn to the apostle's expression. The church of Christ is that body, that πλευρά, or fulness, which He upholds and enriches by His bounty. Diana was esteemed the nurse of all things, and her many breasts denoted her various methods and sources by which she conveyed her nourishment to the universe; such a one, the apostle tells the Ephesians, Christ really was, for He filleth all things with all things. He filleth the church and all its members with a bountiful and rich variety of blessings; hence John, who lived at Ephesus, uses the same manner of expression, Jn. 13:13, ‘And for His fulness we have all received grace for grace;’ i. e. of every grace or celestial gift, conferred above measure upon Him, his disciples have received a portion, according to their measure. See Chandler on Ephesians; Ewald on the same.

HEAT. In Is. 49:10; and Re. 7:16, there is a reference to the burning wind of the desert, the simoom or samiel, described by travellers as exceedingly pestilential and fatal. It is highly probable that this was the instrument with which God destroyed the army of Sennacherib, 2 K. 19:35. Its effects are evidently alluded to in Ps. 103:15,16, and in Jer. 4:11.
Thevenot mentions such a wind, which, in 1658, suffocated 20,000 men in one night, and another which, in 1655, suffocated 4000 persons.
It sometimes burns up the corn, when near its maturity, and hence the image of ‘corn blasted before it be grown up,’ used in 2 K. 19:
26. Its effect is not only to render the air extremely hot and scorching, but to fill it with poisonous and suffocating vapors. The most violent storms that Judea was subject to, came from the deserts of Arabia. ‘Out of the south cometh the whirlwind,’ says Job, 37:9. ‘And there came a great wind from the wilderness,’
Jb. 1:19.

Zch. 9:14,

‘And Jehovah shall appear over them,
And his arrow shall go forth as the lightning;
And his Lord Jehovah shall sound the trumpet;
And shall march in the whirlwinds of the south;

The 91st Psalm, which speaks of divine protection, describes the plague as arrows, and in those winds there are observed flashes of fire.
And therefore, in Nu. 13:3, the place in which the plague was inflicted, is for that reason called Taberah, i. e. a burning. A plague is called σάρξ, ἀκέρ, as a desert is called μεράχ, because those winds came from the desert, and are red plagues.

This hot wind, when used as a symbol, signifies the fire of persecution, or else some prodigious wars which destroy men. For heat signifies war; and scorching heat signifies persecution and destruction.

So in Mat. 13:21, and Lu. 8:12, heat is tribulation, temptation, or persecution; and in 1 Pe. 4:12, burning tends to temptation.

A gentle heat of the sun, according to the Oriental Interpreters, signifies the favor and bounty of the prince; but great heat denotes punishment.

Hence the burning of the heavens, is a portent explained in Livy, b. 3, c. 5, of slaughter,
And thus in Ps. 121:6,

‘The sun shall not smite thee by day,
Nor the moon by night.’

is in the next place explained thus:

‘Jehovah shall preserve thee from all evil;
He shall preserve thy soul.’

HEAVEN. There is, says Daubuz, a threefold world, and therefore a threefold heaven—the invisible, the visible, and the political, among men; which last may be either civil or ecclesiastical.

Wherever the scene is laid, heaven signifies symbolically the ruling power or government; that is, the whole assembly of the ruling powers, which, in respect of the subjects or earth, are a political heaven, being over and ruling the subjects, as the natural heaven stands over and rules the earth.

So that, according to the subject, is the term to be limited; and therefore Artemis, writing in the times of the Roman emperors, makes Italy to be the heaven: 'As heaven,' says he, 'is the abode of gods, so is Italy of kings.'

The Chinese call their monarch Tzeneu, the son of heaven, meaning thereby the most powerful monarch. And thus, in Mat. 24:30, heaven is synonymous to powers and glory; and when Jesus says, 'The powers of the heaven shall be shaken,' it is easy to conceive that He meant that the kingdoms of the world should be overthrown to submit to his kingdom.

Any government is a world; and therefore in Is. 51:15, 16, heaven and earth signify a political universe, a kingdom or polity. And in 65:17, a new heaven and a new earth, signify a new government, new kingdom, new people. See under HEAVEN AND EARTH.

A door opened in heaven, is the beginning of a new kind of government.

To ascend up into heaven, signifies to be in full power to obtain rule and dominion. And thus is the symbol to be understood in Is. 14:13,14, where the king of Babylon says,

'I will ascend into heaven;

'I will exalt my throne above the stars of God.'

To descend from heaven, signifies symbolically, to act by a commission from heaven. And thus our Savior uses the word 'descending.' Jn. 1:51, in speaking of the angels' acting by divine commission, at the command of the Son of man.

To fall from heaven, signifies to lose power and authority, to be deprived of the power to govern, to revolt or apostatize.

The heaven opened. The natural heaven, being the symbol of the governing part of the political world, new face in the natural, represents a new face in the political.

Or, the heaven may be said to be opened when the day appears, and consequently shut when night comes on, as appears from Virgil; Aen. b. 10, v. 1, 'The gates of heaven unfold,' &c. And thus the Scripture, in a poetical manner, speaks of the doors of heaven, Ps. 78:23; of the heaven being shut, 1 K. 8:35; and in Ez. 1:1, the heaven is said to be opened.

Midst of heaven may be the air, or the region between heaven and earth; or the middle station between the corrupted earth and the throne of God in heaven. And in this sense, the air is the proper place where God's threatenings and judgments should be denounced. Thus, in 1 Ch. 21:16, it is said that David saw the angel of the Lord stand between the earth and the heaven, as he was just going to destroy Jerusalem with the pestilence. The angel's hovering there, was to show that there was room to pray for mercy, just as God was going to inflict the punishment: it had not as yet done any execution.

HEAVEN AND EARTH. These, in the prophetic language, often signify the political state or condition of persons of different ranks in this present world.

The heaven of the political world is the sovereignty thereof, whose host and stars are the powers that rule; namely, kings, princes, peers, counsellors, magistrates; and this is perhaps what Sapor king of Persia meant, in his address to Constantine the emperor, where, speaking in the Oriental style, he calls himself 'king of kings, brother of the sun and moon, companion of the stars,' &c.

The earth is the peasantries, plebeians, or common race of man, who possess no power, but are ruled by superiors.

Of such a heaven and earth, we may understand mention to be made in Hag. 2:6,7,21,22, referred to in Ez. 12:26, meaning the political heavens and earth. Also, Jer. 4:23,21,

'I behold the earth, and lo, disorder and confusion;

'The heavens also, and there w^to no light;

'I behold the mountains, and lo, they tremble;

'And all the hills shook;

as if the world were returned to chaos again.

And in Is. 51:15,16,

'I am Jehovah, thy God,
Who divided the sea, (i.e. the Red Sea,) when the waves thereof roared;

Jehovah God of hosts is his name:
And put my words (i.e. my law) in the mouth,
And covered them with the shadow of my hand, (i.e. protected them in the march to Canaan.)'

St. I. might place the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth (i.e. make thee a state, and build thee into a political world).

And say unto Zion, Thou art my people.'

See also Is. 31:2,4,5, 14, 13:10, Ez. 32:7, Mat. 24:29.

Such modes of speaking were usual in the Oriental poetry and philosophy, which made a heaven and earth in every thing, i. e. a superior and inferior in every part of nature; and as we learn from Maimonides, quoted by Mede, who affirms that the Arabians in his time, when they would express that a man was fallen into some great calamity, used to say, 'His heaven has fallen to the earth'; meaning, his superiority or prosperity is much diminished.

'To look for new heavens or a new earth,' 2 Pe. 3:13; then, may mean, to look for a new order of the present world, or, as the Scripture phrases it, Mat. 19:28. Ac. 3:21, 'The regeneration, or the restitution of all things.'

HE GOAT. Da. 8:5. 'And as I was considering, behold a goat came from the west, on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes,' &c.

The Macedonians are called Agedones, from Agis, a goat; see Justin, b. 7; and from the same author we learn, that the goat, since their king Caranus, was the arms of Macedonia.

Bishop Chandler, in his Vindication, p. 154, observes, 'That princes and nations being of old painted by their symbols, which Procopius calls topographia, they came afterwards to be distinguished by writers with the names of their symbols, as by their proper appellations. Yet Alexander derived himself from Jupiter Ammon, and he and his successors had two rams' horns on their coins, the very description of the former beast. But this happened not till after he had subdued Egypt, when, being lord of Persia, he might adopt her arms or ensigns for his own.' Dr. Newton observes, that 'Alexander's son by Roxana was named Aegus, or the son of the goat, and that some of his successors are represented in their coins with goats' horns.'

'And touched not the ground,' denoting the rapidity of his conquests. But the Syrus renders it, 'Nothing touched or hindered him in the earth'; i. e. he met with no impediment or material molestation.

The 'notable or conspicuous horn,' is Alexander himself, as explained by the angel, verse 21.

Verse 6, 'He came to the ram,' &c.; i. e. he encountered Darius.

Verse 9, the single or small horn is understood by some to mean Antiochus Epiphanes, whom Polybius calls Epiphanes, or the Madman. But interpreters are by no means agreed on this subject.

See the articles HORN and LEPORANO.

The particulars which illustrate the fulfilment of this remarkable prophecy may be found at large in the following authors:—Ariani's Expedition of Alexander; Quintus Curtius; Diiodorus Siculus; Plutarch's Life of Alexander. And amongst the moderns, Rollin's Ancient History; Prideaux's Connections; Mede's Works; Newton on the Prophecies; Wintle on Daniel; Spanheim on the Use of Coins, &c., &c.

HORN. Horns naturally stand for power, as the great strength of those animals, which possess them, is placed there. They were, on that account, anciently the hieroglyphical symbols of power, (see the Oneirocritics, c. 82, 83, et alii;) for it has been justly observed, that hieroglyphics were a source of metaphors in the ancient Eastern languages. Thus, in Am. 6:13, where it is said,

'Ye that rejoice in a thing of nought,
That say, Have we not taken to ourselves dominion by our own strength?

Instead of 'strength,' the Hebrew has horas, in De. 33:17, horas are put for strength and power.

'His beauty shall be that of a young bull,
And upon his head shall be the horns of a rhinoceros;

'With these shall push together the people in the extremities of the land.'

Such are the ten thousands of Ephraim;

Such the thousands of Manasseh.'

See this blessing on the head of Joseph well illustrated in Jos. 17:14-18.

In 1 K. 22:11, we find a striking display of symbolical action on the part of the false prophet Zedekiah. He made him horns of iron, and said, 'Thus saith Jehovah, With these thou shalt push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them.'

Jer. 48:23,

'The horn of Moab is cut off;

'And his arm is broken, saith Jehovah.'

i. e. his strength is decayed, he is no longer formidable.

La. 2:3, the subdued and desolate state of the Jews is described by saying, 'He hath cut off in his fierce anger every horn of Israel.'

On the other hand, promises of encouragement are held out in such language as this: Mi. 4:13,

'Arise, and tread out the grain, O daughter of Zion:

'Thine horn will I make iron;

'And thine hoof will I make brass;

'And thou shalt beat in pieces many people;

'And thou shalt devote the gain from them to Jehovah,

'And their substance to the Lord of the whole earth.'

This opinion of the strength of animals consisting in their horns, was held by profane writers, as by Aristotle, Hist. Anim. b. 4, c. 8;

Aelian, Hist. Anim. b. 16, c. 23. And we find Horace, b. 3, Od. 21, saying,

'Tu spem rediua mentibus annixa, Viresque addis et coruus panzeri.'

i. e. thou restorest hope to anxious minds, and adlest horn (meaning strength or confidence) to the poor.

Horns are attributed to Bacchus by Ovid, Metam. b. 4,

'Accedunt capiti cornu, Bacchus eris.'

And Valerius Flaccus ascribes horns to river, on account of their rapid and irresistible course, Argon. b. 6, v. 618,

'Tunc et terrificat ostendit cornibus Helicon.'

Claudian also has,

'Corru temporibus rauos sudantia rives.'

And Spanheim, in his Treatise on Coins, mentions some, in which rivers appear with horns.

Horns were also the symbol of royal dignity and power; and when they are distinguished by number, they signify so many monarchies. Thus, horn signifies a monarchy, in Jer. 48:25, already quoted. And in Zeb. 1:18, &c., the four horns are the four great monarchies, which had each of them subdued the Jews. The ten horns, spoken of in Rev. 13:1, are ten kings. The ten horns, spoken of in Rev. 13:1, as having ten crowns upon them, no doubt signify the same thing, for so we have it interpreted in 17:12. The King of Persia is described by Ammannius Marcellinus as wearing golden rams' horns by way of diadem, b. 69, c. 1, 'Aureum capitis arietini figuramentum interstinctum lapillis pro diademe gessit.' And the effigy of Ptolemy with a ram's horn, as exhibited in ancient sculpture, is mentioned by Spanheim, Dissert. de Numism. Whence also the Kings of Media and Persia are depicted by Daniel, 8:20, under the figure of a horned ram.

When it is said, in Dan. 8:9, that out of one of the four notable horns came forth a little horn, we are to understand, that out of one of the four kingdoms, represented by the four horns, arose another kingdom, 'which became exceeding great.' Some understand by this, Antiochus Epiphanes; others, one of the first Caesars; and others refer it to the Turkish empire, and will have Egypt, Asia, and Greece, to be the three horns torn up or reduced by the Turk. But, as Dr. Zouch observes, the kingdom possessed by Antiochus IV., surnamed Epiphanes, was that to which he legally succeeded by the death of his brother Seleucus Philopator, the son of Antiochus the Great. It was not a new or fifth kingdom, arising out of any of the four kingdoms into which that of Alexander was rent. It was literally a continuation of that kingdom, which commenced in Syria soon after the death of Alexander. Antiochus Epiphanes was the 8th king of Syria. After him are enumerated no less than nineteen kings in regular succession, Antiochus XIII. being the last. If it be asked, What, then, is meant by the little horn? to give a definite reply would be presumptuous, after so much learned controversy on this subject. Suffice it to say, the more general opinion refers it to antichrist, or the Papal usurpator, St. Paul's 'man of sin.' See 2 Th. 2:9,10; and Rev. 13:6.

Mede denies that the 'little horn' can mean Antiochus Epiphanes, because the reign of the little horn extends to the time when the Ancient of Days comes in fiery flames; but Antiochus died 160 years and more before the birth of Christ. And he asserts that the horn is the same with the antichrist of St. John.

Ez. 29:21, 'In that day I will cause the horn of the house of Israel to bud,' &c.

The enlargement of Jehoiachin is supposed to be referred to. See 2 K. 25:27; Jer. 52:31.

Daniel and his three companions were also advanced to authority. Da. 2:48,49,3:20. These marks of favor bestowed on the Jews were preludes to their general restoration.

Horns are also used in Hebrew to express rays of light, from their resemblance to them, as being pointed, and in general, pointing upwards. Hence we find horn and lamp conjoined in Ps. 132:17. God is thus represented in De. 33:2,

'From his right hand issued streams of light.'

And in Ha. 3:9,

'His brightness was as the light;

'Rays (lit. horae) streamed from his hand,

'And there was the abiding-place of his power.'

A pencil or cone of rays, issuing from a point, diverges in the shape of a horn, as New come observes.

Moses is represented by the Jewish writers as wearing horns; i. e. his face shone with a divine lustre, when he came down from Sinai, after his intercourse with God.

The heathens also attribute horns to the moon, and to some of the supposed deities, for a similar reason. Hence Valerius Flaccus, Argon. b. 2, v. 55,

'Praeque nec gravida surrexit Cynthia cornu.'

And again,

'Arda ampicus inimicis cornuta Luna.'

And Ovid,

'Quam de cornigera de Jove natus erat.'

In Spanheim's Coins, there is one where Jupiter appears horned, with this inscription — 'Theos Ammon.'

Musis is, in He. 1:3, called 'the brightness or splendor of the Father's glory,' and in Re. 1:16, his countenance is described 'as the sun shining in his strength.' And the light that shone round Paul at his conversion, a light accompanying or proceeding from the Savior, is said to be a light above the brightness of the sun.

From this meaning of the Hebrew term, and from the action of the solar light upon the vegetable world, as the great instrument of producing plenty, came the notion in the heathen mythology of representing abundance by the emblem of a horn, the cornucopia, the feigned horn of Amalthea, by which it was pretended Jupiter was nursed in his infancy; Amalthea being the name assigned to the goat supposed to have nursed him, and which was afterwards converted into a star. See Ovid's Fasti, v. 117; Hygin. Astron. ii. 13; whose horn was thenceforth said to have the privilege, that whoever possessed it should immediately have what they desired; whence it came to be called the horn of plenty. And hence, perhaps, the Septuagint render the name of one of Job's daughters, viz., Korenappach, by those words, — 'the born of Amalthea.' See Callim. Ilym. to Jupiter, lin. 48, 49,

'Thou dwest the swelling teat of that fumed goat,
Kind Amalthea.'

See also Parkhurst's Lexicon on καπεννυμι, ubi plur.

In L. 1:9, Jesus is called 'a horn of salvation,' i. e. a mighty Savior, equivalent to 'horn of David,' in Ps. 132:17, already referred to. This title is symbolical of the royal dignity and power of the Messiah. He is the anointed King in Zion, Ps. 2:6. He is the King of kings and Lord of lords, which name He carries written on his vesture and thigh, Re. 19:16. His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, which shall break in pieces and consume all other kingdoms, Da. 2:44. He rules from sea to sea, and from the river to the ends of the earth, Ps. 72:8; Zech. 9:10. All kings shall worship Him, and all nations shall serve Him. He is a King, on whose head are many crowns, Re. 19:12. He spoiled principalities and powers, and triumphed over them. He hath the keys of hades and of death.

We have the expression in Scripture, not unfrequently, of 'horns of the altar,' meaning the projections at the four corners, which were a symbol of the divine protection, the altar being regarded as an asylum or sanctuary; and therefore, when Amos says, 3:14, 'The horns of the altar shall be cut off, and fall to the ground'; the meaning is, that there shall be no more atonements made thereon—the asylum or sanctuary, therefore, shall no more stand.

Those who fled to the altar for protection, took hold of the horns of it. Thus Adonijah did, when afraid of Solomon, and Joab, in like manner; but because the latter was guilty of wilful murder, he was slain according to the law, Ex. 21:14.

The idolaters likewise had horns to their altars, so they mimicked the true religion in all outward matters. See Jer. 17:1; Am. 3:14. And they also, when they fled for protection, or implored the help of their gods, were wont to take hold of the horns of their altars. See Servius on Virgil, b. 6, v. 124, and Potter's Antiqu. of Greece, vol. i. p. 193.

Further, the altars were looked upon as the tables of the gods; and, therefore, he who had caught hold on the altar, was considered as one who was received into friendship with the god to whom it was dedicated, and therefore as one who was not to be punished by man.

By Ex. 21:14, it appears that the altar of holocausts was to the Jews an asylum for crimes undesignedly committed. As to the practice of the heathen in this respect, the proofs are copious; whole tragedies of Eschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, being founded on it. And the sanctuary of the altar was held so sacred and inviolable, that Eschylus in one place, amongst others, says, that 'an altar in one place, amongst others, says, that an altar was stronger than a tower — that it was an invincible shield.' Supplices, v. 198.

Hence, also, in doubt, arose the custom, in more modern times, of making churches, abbeys, and other buildings, devoted to religious uses, as an asylum for criminals, and a sanctuary for debtors.

HORSE. The horse, as Daubuz observes, was of old used only for warlike expeditions, and not barely to ride, draw, and drudge, as is now practised with us.

Hence, in that noble description of the horse, Jn. 39:18-25, there is no notice taken of any quality of his but what relates to war.

So that the horse is the symbol of war and conquest. And therefore, when the prophet Zechariah, 10:3, says that 'God hath made Judah as his goodly horse in the battle,' the meaning is, that He will make them conquerors over his enemies, glorious and successful.

Thus, in Ps. 45:5, 22, releb, to ride, is translated in the Septuagint by βασιλεύειν, to reign; and in several other places, to ride signifies to have dominion. De. 32:13; Ps. 66:12; Is. 58:14. Agreeably to this, the Indian and other interpreters say, that if any one dreams that he rides upon a generous horse, it denotes that he shall obtain dignity, fame, authority, prosperity, and a good name among the people; in short, all such things which may accrue to a man by good success in martial affairs.

And hence, from the horse's being the instrument of conquest, and therefore the symbol of the dignity, prosperity, and success he causes, when Carthage was founded, and a horse's head was dug up by the workmen, the soothsayers gave out that the city would be warlike and powerful. Justin. b. 18, c. 5.

As a horse is a warlike, so is he also a swift, creature, and is therefore not only the symbol of conquest, but of the speediness of it. Jo. 2:1; He. 1:8; Jer. 4:13.

If the color of the horse be given, it must be particularly considered. White is the symbol of joy, felicity, and prosperity; and therefore white horses were used by conquerors on their days of triumph; Ovid, de Arte amandi, lib. 1, v. 214. And it was, and still is, the custom of the Eastern nations to ride on white horses at the marriage cavalcade.

White horses were also looked upon by the ancients as the swiftest. Hor. b. 1, Sat. 7, v. 8; Virgil, AEn. b. 12, v. 84.

By a white horse, therefore, all the good significations of a horse are greatly enhanced.

For a prince to dream that he rides armed, denotes, according to the Persian and Egyptian, in ch. 155, that he shall overcome his enemies, and obtain great renown in war.

So the woman riding upon a beast, Re. 17:3, is explained by the angel to be (verse 18) the great city which reigns over the kings of the earth, viz. Rome.

Song 1:9,

'I have compared thee, O my love,
To a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariots.'

The comparison here may appear uncouth to the refined manners of this age, but the Greek and Latin poets frequently compare a beautiful woman to a heiress, a creature far inferior, Sophocles, Trach. 5, 532, so compares a delicate virgin. And Euripides calls Polycyna πολυκύνη; Hecuba 5, 526. And Horace calls a young woman Jumenta, b. 2, Ode 5. See Durell.

Vitringa thinks, that by the horses, in Zech. 10:3, the Maccabean heroes and soldiers are meant.

In Re. ch. 6, angels are described as sitting upon horses of various colors, denoting their promptitude and celerity of their movements in the execution of the divine purposes. Horses were anciently consecrated to the sun, 9 K. 23:11; as Ovid, in his Fasti, b. 1, observes, 'The Persians sacrifice horses to the sun, that a sluggish victim may not be offered to a swift deity.'

BOST or HEAVEN. Da. 8:10, 'And it (the little horn) waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them.' See also verse 11.

Considered by many to point out the aspiring nature and usurping power of Antiochus Epiphanes, that would swell to such a pitch as to exceed all imaginable authority, so as to reach the stars, according to Ob. verse 4, or to ascend into heaven above the stars, and to extol his throne, like the king of Babylon, in Is. 14:13. And in 2 Macc. 9:10, Antiochus is described as the man who thought he could reach to the stars of heaven.

The language that follows in this verse is, by a usual and familiar metaphor in Scripture, applicable to the Jews, or the then true church of God. Is. 24:21, 'The lust of the high ones that are on high,' is explained by Vitringa of the Jewish rulers and people. 'God's people have their citizenship in heaven, and shine λόγος φωτός, as lights or luminaries in the world. See Is. 14:13, and Re. 1:20, where the angels or governors of the churches are called stars.

The priests and Levites, like the angels, were also continually waiting on the service of the King of heaven in the temple, as of old in the tabernacle; (see Nu. 8:21;) and these were that part of the host, or the holy people, or people of the holy God, as at verse 24, that were thrown down and trampled on.

Spener, in his Treatise de Legibus Heb. b. 1, c. 4, p. 202, takes notice, that the Scripture often borrows expressions from military affairs, to accommodate itself to the use of the tabernacle; and hence is the frequent use of the term 'host.' The host of heaven, and the prince of the host, he thinks must refer to the body of the priests, who exercised the offices of their warfare under the standards of the Deity. Now, Antiochus overthrew some of the most celebrated juminaries amongst the leaders of the Jewish people, and reduced them to the lowest disgrace.

But this prophecy is thought, after all, to receive its fulfilment, not by Antiochus, but by the Roman state, which arose in the north-west part of those nations which composed the body of the goat, and was very small in the beginning, but became very great afterwards.

See Wintle on Daniel, Mede's Works, Zouch on the Prophecies, Bishop Newton, and others.

HOST of heaven, Ge. 21, signifies the sun, moon, and stars, under the symbol of an army; in which the sun is considered as the king, the moon as his viceroy or prime minister in dignity, — the stars and planets as their attendants, and the constellations as the battalions and squadrons of the army drawn up in order, that they may concur with their leaders to execute the designs and commands of the sovereign.

And thus, according to this notion, it is said in the song of Deborah, Jud. 5:20, 'The stars in their courses fought against Sisera.'

HOUSE is often used in Scripture for the family, children, and servants.

Ge. 7:1, 'Enter thou and all thy house (family) into the ark.'

Ex. 1:21, 'And it came to pass, because the midwives feared God, that He made them houses,' i. e. He prospered their families.

And so in 1 S. 2:35. 2 S. 7:27. 1 K. 11:38.

And so in Euripides, Bacch. 389, 'Wisdom is immovable, and keeps together a house,' an expression similar to that used by Solomon, Pr. 9:1,

'Wisdom hath builded her house;
She hath hewn out her seven pillars.'

And, therefore, in the symbolic language, houses, palaces, and suns, mutually explain each other.

Thus, according to the Persian and Egyptian interpreters, ch. 148, 'If a king dreams that he orders a new palace to be built for his habitation, and it be finished, it denotes that he shall beget a son and heir,' children, or rather sons, being the settlement of a house or family.

2 S. 7:11, 'Also the Lord telleth thee, that He will make thee a house,' i. e. He will give thee offspring, who may receive and may preserve the royal dignity.

Ps. 49:12, 'Their inward thought is, that their houses shall continue forever,' i. e. that their posterity shall always flourish. But Durell has remarked, that all the ancient versions read otherwise — they read keberem, instead of kerem; and then the sense is,

'Their sepulchres shall be their houses forever;
Their dwelling-place to all generations.'

Ge. 43:16, 'Joseph said to the ruler of his house,' i. e. to the manager of his domestic concerns.

Is. 36:3, 'Eliakim, who was over the house, or household,' i. e. his steward.

Ge. 30:30, 'When shall I provide for mine own house also?' i. e. get wealth to maintain my family. See 1 Ti. 5:8.

HUNGER AND THIRST are the symbols of affliction.

Thus, in De. 8:3, it is said, 'He humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger,' where the latter is the instrument of the former.

So De. 32:24, 'They shall be burnt with hunger,' i. e. they shall be tormented or afflicted.

So to fast, is often called to afflict one's soul, as in Le. 16:29-31. Is. 58:5.

In Aristophanes, (Aves,) hunger is proverbially used for great misery. See 1 Co. 4:11. 2 Co. 11:27. Phil. 4:12.

By several expressions of our Savior, to hunger and thirst signifies to be in want of hearing God's word; that is, to be hindered by persecuting from worshipping God in peace. See Ps. 23; Ec. 24:19. Jn. 4:13, 14. 6:35. Am. 8:11 Ez. 7:26.

HYSSOP. An herb of detergent and cleansing qualities, used in sprinkling the blood of the paschal lamb. Ex. 12:22.

In composing the water of the purification, Nu. 19:6; and sprinkling it, verse 18. It was a type or emblem of the purifying virtue of the bitter sufferings of Jesus Christ.

Pliny often mentions its virtues: 'Calidum in spongia appositum, adjecto — aut hyssop fasciculo, medetur sedis vitis.' Nat. Hist. b. 23, c. 1, and in other places.

I.

INCENSE is the symbol of prayer, as mentioned in Re. 5:8, and 8:4, in both which passages, as in many others, the language is borrowed from the Old Testament ritual. So, in Ma. 1:11, where there is a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles, it is given under Jewish images:

'My name shall be great among the nations;
And in every place shall incense be brought unto my name,
And a pure offering.'

On which passage, see Mede's Christian Sacrifice, ch. 6.

The same is the case in Zch. 14:16, where the prophet speaks according to Jewish ideas. On this, Michaelis observes: 'Non quidem Levitice, sed in spiritu et veritate, perinde ac festum Paschatos et Pentecostes.' 1 Co. 5:7,8; 'Sub exanim anni gratia, seu finem mundi — uberrimam tunc habitudinem domorum gratiae et Spiritus Sancti.' Bib. Hale, 1720. See Newcome.

This Jewish mode of speaking is observable in another place. The smoke of incense, like all other smokes, was said to ascend. So, speaking of Cornelius, Ac. 10:4, the angel says, 'Thy prayers and thine alms are come up for a memorial before God.'

In Re. 5:8, golden bowls full of incense are mentioned, at representations, as Lowman observes, of the prayers of the church, and expressive of the most solemn worship. Thus the Psalmist, Ps. 141:2, 'Let my prayer be set before thee as incense.' In Re. 8:4, the smoke of the incense is said to ascend up before God, out of the angel's hand; an allusion to the constant offering of incense in the temple, and to God's gracious acceptance of their worship.

Things thus represented in heaven, prefigure things here on earth, says Dr. Henry More, and these ceremonies of the temple, the devotions of the Christians, whose prayers are here represented as coming up in remembrance before God.

In the oneirocritics, incense is the symbol of favor and good fame.

To incense men with a censor, signifies, according to the Indian, ch. 28, to speak harsh words, but sweet at the same time, or profitable to them — the harshness being signified by the fire, and the sweetness by the incense.

IRON is the symbol of strength. Ferrarini de Re metall., p. 211, says, 'Ferrum duritie superat omnia fere metalla; hinc ad opera quatinus durant, facienda conducti, praecipue arma.' Is. 4:3-4, 'Thy neck is as an iron sinew.'

Iron requires the strongest fire of all the metals to melt it. It is sometimes made the symbol of sharp afflictions. See De. 4:20. 1 K. 8:51. Since iron requires the strongest fire of all metals to fuse it, there is a peculiar propriety in the expression, 'a furnace for iron,' or an iron furnace for violent and sharp afflictions.

Pv. 107:10, 'Being bound in affliction and iron'; i. e. by a hemispherical, bound in afflictive iron.

Da. 2:33,41, 'The legs (of the image) were of iron, his feet part of iron, and part of clay.' See Jerome's commentary on this passage, quoted by Bishop Newton; and Josephus, on the same subject, Antiq. b. 10, ch. 1, § 4; and Mede's Works, b. 4, letter 6.

Da. 7:7, the fourth beast is said to have great iron teeth. That this and the former both denote the Roman power has been well proved by many.

Jer. 15:12,

'Shall he break iron in pieces,
Iron from the North, and brass?'

i. e., as Blayney explains it, 'Shall the enemy crush or overpower one whom I have made like the hardest iron and brass?' alluding to what God had said to the prophet, when He first engaged him in his service, 1:18.

'Iron from the North,' is supposed to denote, in a primary sense, that species of hardened iron or steel, called in Greek, Chalybs, from the Chalybes, a people bordering on the Euxine Sea, and consequently lying to the north of Judea, by whom the art of tempering steel is said to have been discovered.

Jer. 17:1, 'The sin of Judah is written with a pen of iron;' i. e. idolatry was indelibly fixed in their affections and memory.

I K. 2:21, Zedekiah the false prophet makes use of horns of iron symbolically, and says to Ahab, 'With these,' i. e. with a strength such as is represented by these, 'thou shalt gore the Syrians, until thou have destroyed them.'

Pr. 27:17,

'As iron is sharpened by iron,
So a man is sharpened by the countenance of his friend.'

i. e., receives alacrity, strength, and spirits.

Ez. 43, 'Take unto thee a plate of iron,'

Probably such as cakes were baked on. Taylor's Heb. Cone. This may denote the strong breasts of the besiegers, or their firmness and perseverance in the siege.

Re. 9:9, 'They had breastplates, as it were breastplates of iron.'

This denotes, says Danzig, that the Saracens should be a bold, hard, mischievous enemy, being so well armed for that purpose. And this their great victories and conquests have sufficiently verified.

It is observable, that the natural locust hath about its body a pretty hard shell, of the color of iron, to which there is an allusion in Chaucer, Epigr. 33, so that herein the symbol of the breastplate is exactly suited to the natural locust.

That iron denotes strength appears from Da. 2:10, where it is said, 'Iron, which breaketh in pieces and subdueth all things.'

ISLAND. It is certain that the Hebrews did not mean the same as we do by islands, i. e., lands encompassed with water all around; but simply countries or regions at a distance, such as they could not reach without crossing the sea, or such as had a line of sea-coast. Hence Lowth, for most part, renders the Hebrew term נֶגֶשׁ, aim, by distant lands. Bochart has shown, with much probability, that the countries peopled by Chittim, the grandson of Japhet, are Italy and the adjacent provinces of Europe, which lie along the Mediterranean Sea. The proper translation of שָׂמֵחַ in many passages would be, 'the region which is by the sea-side.' Mede thinks the Greek aia derived from שָׂמֵחַ, and that Ægyptus is aia, Caphri, Æthiopia, aia, Theophi, &c. Disc. 50. Zph. 2:11,

'Jehovah will be terrible against them,

'He will fill fannish all the gods of the earth;

'And all the islands of the nations.'

Shall bow themselves unto Him, every one from his place.'

By the earth, says Sir Isaac Newton on Daniel, p. 276, the Jews understood the great continent of all Asia and Africa, to which they had access by land; and by the isles of the sea, they understood the places to which they sailed sea, particularly all Europe.

The prophet here foretells the gradual fall of idolatry, and its deep, and at length deadly wound, by the spreading of the gospel.

Re. 6:14, 'Every mountain and island were moved out of their places.' Great public calamities are described in the prophets, as if the order of nature were overturned; so that the expressions here and in 16:20 are not to be understood literally.

Every place or haven to which ships resort, says Danzig, was by the Jews called an island. Thus Tyre, as it was anciently, is called the isle, in Is. 23:2,6, though seated only near the sea; and the Tyrians are called 'the inhabitants of the isle,' v. 3,11. And because the Hebrews looked upon islands as places of merchandise, to which men went to traffic and fetch riches, hence it comes, that an island, in their notion, is akin to Martown, a rich, trading, populous city, a place whence riches are brought. Thus in Ez. 27:3, Tyre is called a marts, ἐπόστολος, of the people from many islands. And the whole chapter, together with the Targum, is a proof of this, especially the 15th verse, where it is said, 'many isles were the merchandise of thine hand.' So in Is. 60:9, islands and ships are mentioned in order to produce and bring silver and gold.

Hence, ships are the symbols of profit and riches. See Sura.

In Euripides, πλύγας πλωτόν τηρην, a great haven of riches, signifies a great revenue. Orest. v. 1077.

So that islands symbolically signify riches, revenues, ways of trading, and the like. And thus America and the West Indies may, in the Hebrew style, be termed islands to Britain, Spain, &c., because of the commerce and traffic between them.

Hence, in Is. 23:4, it is said of Tyre —

'The harvest of the river was her revenues,

'And she became the mart of the nations.'

He compares their trade by sea to the overflowing of the Sihor or Nile, and says that it brings them riches, as the Nile does to Egypt by its fertility.

Jb. 22:30, 'He shall deliver the island of the innocent.'

Durand observes, that He here is not a substantive, but an adverb, and translates it thus —

'The innocent, wherever he is, will deliver himself, and deliverance shall be to thee by the purity of thine hands.'

K. KEY is used as a symbol of government, power, and authority.

Is. 22:22,

'Will lay the key of the house of David upon his shoulder.'

See Lowth's note on the passage. In illusion to the image of the key as the ensign of power, the unlimited extent of that power is expressed, with great clearness as well as force, by the sole and exclusive authority to open and shut. Our Savior, therefore, has on a similar occasion made use of a like manner of expression, Mat. 16:19, and in Re. 3:7, has applied to Himself the very words of the prophet. 'He that hath the key of David, He that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth and no man openeth.'

Mat. 16:19,

'And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven.'

I will give, i. e. after my resurrection, the keys, i. e. the power of preaching the gospel officially, of administering the sacraments, and of exercising church discipline, as a steward of the mysteries of God, and as a faithful servant, held not for domination, but for edification.

Of the kingdom of heaven — not of earth.

Bernard remarks on this passage: 'Quoniam tibi major videtur et dignitas et potestas dimicandi pecunia, an prædia dividendi? Sed non est comparatio. Habent haec infinita et terrena judicices suos, Reges et Principes terræ. Quid facilem vestram in alienam messem extenditis? Non quia insisteret in eis, sed quia iniquum vobis talibus insisteret, quippe potioribus occupatis.' Nor is the observation of Prideaux, bishop of Worcester, undeserving of quotation: 'Peter obtained no supremacy over the rest of the apostles; he received the keys with the rest, not above the rest — and those, not of earth, but of heaven, as being first in age, zeal, and boldness, not in office — to feed Christ's sheep, not his own?'

Peter may be said to have opened the kingdom of heaven, as being the first who preached the gospel to the Jews after his Master's ascension, Ac. ch. 2; and to the Gentiles, Ac. ch. 10.

Re. 9:1, and 20:1, 'the key of the abyss,' i. e. a commission to open it, to let loose Satan to deceive the nations.

On this last passage, Henry More remarks —

'A fallen star signifies a lapsed spirit; and the having the key of the bottomless pit given him, denotes his power in the kingdom of darkness, of which a key is the symbol.'

Re. 1:18, 'The keys of hades and of death,' i. e. having power over the separate state of departed spirits; to call men out of this life into the invisible state, to raise them from death at last, and to reunite soul and body at the resurrection. See the Orphic hymn to Pluto, quoted by Parkhurst.

The heathen, to denote the government of Pluto, and the rest of the infernal gods, assigned to them the keys of the infernal pits. And therefore, Pluto and Proserpine were represented with keys in their hands. Aristophanes says of Juno, whom the pagans would suppose to be that deity who presided over the nuptial rite, that she keeps the keys of marriage. Silene is represented in Sophocles (Oed.) by a golden key on the tongue. And in the Arabian writers, Soliman Ben Alahabat had the title of the key of goodness, because he had set at liberty all the witches in prison, and done good to all his subjects.

As stewards of a great family, especially of the royal household, bore a key, probably a golden one, as the lords of the household do, in token of their office, the phrase of giving a person a key, naturally grew into an expression of raising him to great power.

Key is used also as a symbol of ability to interpret Scripture. Lu. 11:50, 'Ye have taken away the key of knowledge.' And, according to the same analogy, 'to open the Scriptures,' Lu. 24:32, is to show the true meaning of them, whereby others may understand them.

It is said that authority to explain the law and the prophecies was given among the Jews by the delivery of a key; and of one Rabbi Samuel we read, that after his death, they put his key and his tablets into his coffin, because he did not deserve to have a son, to whom he might leave the ensigns of his office. If the Jews really had such a custom in our Savior's time, the above expression may seem a beautiful reference to it. Parkhurst on Kletz.

KILL, or SLAY. To kill, or slay, is to be explained according to the nature of the subject spoken of.

To kill men means to destroy them utterly. Mat. 10:28, 'Fear not them who kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul.'

To kill a kingdom, is to destroy utterly the power it had to act as such — for acting and being are analogical to each other; and government is the life of the commonwealth. And, therefore, as long as the commonwealth can perform the actions of government, so long it lives; if they are stopped, that life dies.

Wrath is said to kill a man. Jb. 5:2, either by its injurious effects, when indulged, upon the human frame; or by leading them to commit furious deeds, and so bringing them under the extreme penalty of the law, or as offending God, and provoking Him to cut them off.

Pr. 21:25, the desire of the slothful is said to kill him, because he lacks activity to procure the desired object lawfully, and has recourse to ruinous means of gratifying his desires.

2 Co. 3:6, 'the letter' i. e. of the law of God, is said to kill.

It condemns and denounces the most solemn penalties, even that of death, upon every transgressor, leaving no hope, and furnishing no strength.

Ho. 6:5,

'Therefore have I hewn them by the prophets;

I have slain them by the words of my mouth.'

i. e. have been most impudent with them. See similar expressions from Terence and Meander, quoted by Newcome.

KING signifies the possessor of the supreme power, whether lodged in one or more persons.

Pr. 13:16,

* By Me kings reign, and princes decree justice;
By My prince's rule, and nobles, even all the judges of the earth.'

It also frequently signifies a succession of kings.

And king and kingdom are synonymous, as appears from Da. 7:17,23.

It is applied especially to God, as Sovereign over all. Ps. 10:16;

'Jehovah King forever and ever.'

Ps. 29:10,

'Jehovah sitteth upon the flood;

Jehovah sitteth King forever.'

Also Ps. 44:4, and others frequently.

It is applied to the Messiah. Ps. 2:6,

'I have set my King upon my holy hill of Zion.'

It is applied to all true Christians, Re. 1:6, who are consecrated to God as kings and priests.

In 1 Pe. 2:13,17, it particularly signifies the Roman emperor, whom the Greek writers call king. See Josephus de Bello, b. 3, c. 7, § 3.

Moloch, the name given to an idol worshipped by the Ammonites and others, in the Hebrew language signifies king, and is generally translated by the Septuagint 'the ruler'; and in Jer. 32:35, they call him 'Moloch, the king.' The sun is supposed to have been worshipped under this name, as the king or lord of day. And the heathen Saturn is understood to correspond to the Moloch of the Scriptures, as appears by the similarity of their rites, and the sacrifices offered to them. See Dnd, Sic, b. 20. It is applied to Satan, in Re. 9:11; for, though the natural locusts have no king, (see Pr. 30:27,) yet those figurative locusts mentioned by John have one, who is the angel of the bottomless pit, the prince of the power of darkness, justly called the destroyer.

It is applied to death, in Jb. 18:14, who is there called the 'king of terrors.'

In Jb. 41:34, it is applied to the Leviathan or crocodile.

'He looketh upon every thing with haughtiness;

He is a king over all the children of pride.'

Ho. 10:8 says, 3:4,5,

'The sons of Israel shall stade many days
Without a king, and without a prince,' &c.
Afterwards the sons of Israel shall return,
And shall seek Jehovah their God,
And David their king,
And shall reverence Jehovah and his goodness, in the latter days.'

This prophecy, which some refer to Zerubbabel, and some to the Messiah, in all probability remains to be accomplished. It is the opinion of Newcome, that on the future return of God's people, an illustrious king of this name and stock will reign over Israel, and transmit the kingdom to his descendants forever. Compare Jer. 30:9. Ez. 34:23-24,37-24,25.

In the new song, Re. 15:3, God is called the 'King of saints.'

'Kings of the east,' Re. 16:12. Mede and Lowman both consider the Turks to be meant under this title. The latter thinks the Euphrates means the Adriatic Sea, and that an invasion of the Papal territories is here intended.

KINGDOM Used sometimes to signify heaven; as in Mat. 26:29. 2 Ti. 4:18.

Also, government or supreme administration. 1 S. 18:8.

Also, the state of the Christian church under the gospel dispensation. Mat. 3:9, &c. Also, the royal priesthood of the true people of God. Ex. 19:6; 1 Pe. 2:9.

Kingdom of the stone, Da. 2:31,44, and kingdom of the mountain, Da. 2:35,45, are both meant of the kingdom of the Messiah.

See Mede's Works, p. 743, &c.

KISS. The symbol of idolatrous worship.

Ho. 13:2, 'Let the men who sacrifice kiss the calves.' See 1 K. 19:18.

Thus Cicero describes a statue of Hercules, as having 'rictum ejus ac mentem paulo attritum, quod in precibus et gratulationibus non solum adorari, verum etiam osculari, solchanci;' in Verr. act 2, l. 4, § 43.

Jb. 31:27, 'or my mouth hath kissed my hand.' There is here an evident allusion to the superstitious rites of idolaters. The custom of kissing the hand, in token of adoration, is very ancient, as well as universal. The ground of it appears to be awe or respect; thus Job, when he determines to be silent before God, says, 'I will lay my hand upon my mouth.' 40:4.

Pliny, where he enumerates strange customs, says, 'In worshipping, we use the right hand for kissing, and move the whole body round; in Gaul, they prefer using the left.' See Hist. Nat. 28, c. 2.

Apolinurus observes, that many of his countrymen applied their right hand to their mouths, the first finger being upon the thumb erect, in order that they might perform due adoration to the goddess Venus.

Lucian also remarks, that the poor, who had nothing to offer in sacrifice but the kissing of their hands, were not excluded.

Demosthenes, being carried into a temple, is said to have kissed his hand, in token of adoration.

The Syrian churches, to this day, when they receive the sacrament, are said to kiss the bread and cup before they partake of them.

Thus courtiers kiss the king's hand when presented to him, or when appointed to office; and it is customary now, in many countries, to kiss the garment of a superior, out of respect.

The holy kiss, or kiss of love, Ro. 16:16. 1 Co. 16:20, and elsewhere, was a mere transfer of the common mode of salutation in Eastern countries, in ancient times, into an affectionate expression of pure attachment for the truth's sake, each saluting those of their own sex only, as described in the Apost. Constit. b. 9, c. 57. This practice is mentioned by Justin Martyr in his Apology: 'Prayers being ended, we salute one another with a kiss, and then the bread and cup are brought to the president.' The men and women sat apart in the Christian assemblies, the same as was done in the Jewish synagogues.

Ps. 2:12, 'Kiss the Son, lest he be angry.' To kiss, in this place, implies to reverence, Thus, 'all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him.' 1 K. 19:18.

KNEE. To the knee, is to worship. 1 K. 19:18. Ro. 11:4.

Also, to pray. Ep. 3:14.

Also, to be in subjection. Phil. 2:10. That kneeling was the posture of prayer, see 2 Ch. 6:13. Da. 6:10. Lu. 22:41. Ac. 7:56. 9:40. 20:36. 21:5. Ezr. 9:5. Ep. 3:14.

Knees are sometimes put for persons; as in Jb. 4:4. He. 12:12.

L.

LAMB. The symbol of meekness.

Is. 11:6, 'Then shall the wolf take up his abode with the lamb.'

Is. 65:25, 'The wolf and the lamb shall feed together.'

Jer. 11:19, 'For I was like a tame lamb that is led to slaughter.'

Hence it is the special and peculiar symbol of Jesus Christ, who is declared by the Baptist to be the Lamb of God, because He was to be sacrificed to Him, in order to take away the sins of the world. We find Isaiah predicting his suffering under this character, 53:7—

'It was exacted, and He was made answerable;
And He opened not His mouth;
As a lamb that is led to the slaughter,
And as a sheep dumb before her shearers,
So He opened not His mouth.'

See Ac. 8:32.

Jesus is recognized as such in the visions of John, Re. 5:6, &c. 'And lo, in the midst of the throne stood a lamb, as it had been slain.'

True Christians, who resemble their Master, have the same name assigned to them. 1.ii. 10: 3. 'Behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves.' See Jn. 21:15.

The hypocritical assumption of this meekness, and the carrying on of persecution under a show of charity to the souls of men, and bestowing absolutions and indulgences on those who conform to its rules, appears to have given rise to the application of this otherwise sacred title to Antichrist, Re. 13:11, 'And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth, and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon.' To what particular power or period this passage is applicable, it is extremely difficult to decide. Every commentator differs from another. Lowman tries to reconcile them, but I think unsuccessfully.

LAMP, on account of its light, is the symbol of government or a governor. Thus, concerning the law of God, the Psalmist says, Ps. 119:105, 'Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my paths,' the law being that whereby the king was to be guided. And in 1 K. 11:36, lamp signifies the seat and domains, or else the perpetual succession, of a kingdom. The words are, 'That my servant David may have a lamp always before me in Jerusalem.' But the Septuagint have, 'That my servant David may have a seat or position?' So the Septuagint turn the Hebrew of 1 K. 13:4, by καράπεπα; and it follows λαβην, a remnant to settle a foundation. But in 2 K. 8:19, they have λαύπεια, a lamp all which expressions are parallel to this in 2 S. 7:13, 'I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever;' this being more proper, and the rest being symbolical expressions of the same promise of God.

The oneirocritics apply the misfortunes that happen to the lamp, to the loss of a kingdom or power to rule.

In the Greek church, in the consecration of a bishop, among other symbolical ceremonies, there was a lamp delivered to him, and to the patriarch of Constantinople, a double lamp.

In the Eastern countries, weddings were celebrated with lamps or torches; the bridegroom and bride, the bride-men and bride-maids, having each one in their hands. And the same custom was observed among the Greeks and Romans. See Mat. 25:1. Homer, Iliaj 6, v. 492. Eurip. Phoen. v. 346; Medea, v. 1027; Virgil, Eleg. 8, v. 29.

The Jews used to light lamps at their festivals; a custom sneered at by Persius, Sat. 5, v. 179. And the same was common among the Romans — on occasions of domestic rejoicing, the doors of the house were hung with laurels, and illuminated with lamps.

Juvenal thus expresses himself in one of his Satires —

'Longos erexit Janus ramos.

Et matutina operar feata lucernis.'

It appears from Tertullian, that the Christians adopted this practice. He thus charges the alienated disciples of the faith: — 'Sed lucernam, inquit, (nempe Christus,) opera vestra. At nunc lucent tabernacula et janua nostra: plures jam inveneris fore sine lucernis et laureis quam Christianorum.'

The Jews probably took their custom of burning lamps at their feasts from the Egyptians. Herodotus, b. II, tells us, there was an annual sacrifice at Lais, known by the name of the feast of lamps. The Chinese have a similar festival at the present day.

Persius, in the passage before referred to, must not be understood to speak of the feast of lamps among the Jews. That festival was instituted by Judas, and was held annually on the 25th of the month Chislev. See Josephus, and Picard des Ceremonies des Juifs.

In Ge. 15:17, the words 'burning lamp' mean a dame or cone of fire, in the midst of the smoky cloud, the emblem of the divine presence, as at Sinai, Ex. 19:18; so, in Ex. 20:18, lepidia are flames or flashes of fire.

When lamp is used to signify successor, as in that passage, 'I have ordained a lamp for mine Anointed,' Ps. 132:17, the metaphor is taken from the light being continually kept in by fresh supplies successively. Theocritus uses the same expression, Idyll. 27.

Lu. 12:35, 'and your lamps burning;' a phrase to denote constant vigilance.

LEAVES of a tree are explained by the Interpreters, in ch. 15, of the common sort of men, αθότων, as trees themselves are the symbols of the higher orders, or nobles, αἰρέοντων and πετυτων.

Leaves that are strong and green, denote men of sound judgment; those that are weak and withered, men of a weak judgment and depraved manner.

Sometimes leaves are explained of clothes, on account of the analogy; since both serve for a covering.

Homeric beautifully compares the human race to leaves, Il. 6, 146:

'Like leaves on trees the race of man is found,
Now green in youth, now withering on the ground:
Another race the following spring supplies,
They fall successive, and succeed each.
So generations in their course decay,
So flourish these, when those are passed away. Pope.'

Joh. deprecating the divine inflictions, uses the same simile, 13:25 —

'Wilt Thou break a leaf driven to and fro?

'Wilt Thou pursue the dry stubble?'

And Is. 64:6,

'We fade like a leaf, all of us,

'And our sins like the wind, carry us away.'

Re. 22:2, 'The leaves of the tree (of life) were for the healing of the nations' (see Ez. 47:12); i. e. they have a sovereign virtue against all sorts of indisposition; they are calculated to promote immortality.

LEOPARD. The symbolic character of the leopard rests chiefly upon three of his distinguishing qualities, viz.

1. Cruelty, as referred to in Is. 11:6; Jer. 5:6; IIo. 13:7.
 2. Swiftness. See IIa. 13:8.
 3. Variety of skin. See Jer. 13:23.
 Hence, in hieroglyphic language, a leopard represents,—an implacable enemy—a crafty and pernicious person—a powerful and fraudulent enemy.

And the variety of his spots denotes wickedness and deceit.

See Artemidorus and the oneirocritics.

In Jer. 5:6, the wild beasts there spoken of are the king of Babylon and his troops.

In Is. 11:6, the meaning plainly is, that men of a fierce, intractable disposition shall, in the gospel kingdom, associate peacefully with those of an opposite temper, being subdued by divine influence.

The passage in Jer. 13:23 clearly imports, that habits of sinning as are difficult to eradicate as it would be to take out the natural spots of a leopard.

Da. 7:6. After this I beheld, and lo, another, like a leopard, which had upon the back of four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.

The founders of the four great monarchies are probably called beasts, on account of the savage and cruel measures they pursued. The person here alluded to is generally considered to be Alexander the Great, and, in many respects, the parallel between him and the leopard must hold. His well-known reply to one who asked him how he obtained so many signal victories, of μηδείς ἀράσαλλητες, i. e., never delaying, is quite consonant with the celerity of the leopard, and the method by which it leaps on its prey; as his daring to engage with Darius and the most powerful princes, is illustrative of the leopard's spirit and courage, which will rouse it to a contest with the largest and fiercest wild beasts. The leopard, says Bochart, is of small stature, but of great courage, so as not to be afraid to engage with the lion and the largest animal. And so Alexander, a little king in comparison, of small stature to, and with a small army, dared to attack the king of kings, that is, Darius, whose kingdom was extended from the Egean Sea to the Indus.

The leopard is said to fix his eye upon the prey, in order to take the surest occasion of seizing them. This Pliny observes, ‘Insidit pardi condensa arborum, occultatque carum ramis in præterea deslinunt.’ Leopards, tamed and taught to hunt, are made use of, according to Warmer, in Palestine, for hunting, and seize the prey with surprising agility. When the leopard leaps, he is said to throw himself seven or eighteen feet at a time.

* Non sanguine exstinct illum.

Sedum, et hinc, haec jet super anima esteris,

Quam p. m. raptu' celorum venabilius pacium.’

Lucan. b. 6

All this well expresses the speed of Alexander's conquests in Persia and the Indies, which were performed in ten or twelve years' time.

The leopard is a spotted animal, and so was a proper symbol of Alexander, when we consider the different manners of the nations which Alexander commanded, and by whose help he became the conqueror of the world—as well as the diversified disposition of Alexander himself, who was sometimes merciful and sometimes cruel, alternately temperate and drunken, abstemious and intemperate.

By the four wings on its back or sides seems to be meant the union of the four empires—the Assyrian, Median, Persian, and Grecian; or, as some think, Persia, Greece, Egypt, and India. But in this there is much uncertainty. May we not with greater propriety say, that the rapidity with which these nations were united under Alexander is fully denoted by the character of wings?

After the death of Alexander, the partition of his kingdom into four parts is probably what is meant by the four heads of the beast. And if we reflect on the small beginnings of this power—the difficulties which it surmounted—and the vast strides which it made towards universal empire, extending its conquests as far as the Ganges in so short a space as twelve years, (1 Marc. 1:7,) we shall not be at a loss to assign a fair interpretation for the last clause of this verse, and to conclude that such ‘dominion was the gift of God.’ See Wintle on Daniel.

The ‘four heads’ were Cassandra, Ptolemy, Lysimachus, and Seleucus, Alexander's captains and successors.

Ptolemy reigned over Egypt, Lybia, Arabia, Cœlo-syria, and Palestine; Cassandra over Macedon, Greece, and Epirus; Lysimachus over Thrace and Bithynia; Seleucus over Babylon, Syria, and the rest of the empire. This division continued for several years. See Diod. Sic. b. 20; Polyb. b. 5, &c.

And here I think it right to insert the val-able observations of Prideaux in reference to this subject, part 1, b. 8.—‘After that, Alexander subdued the Mardans, Arians, Drangians, Aracansians, and several other nations, over which he flew with victory swifter than others can travel, often with his horse pursuing his enemies upon the spur whole days and nights, and sometimes making long marches for several days, one after the other, as once he did in pursuit of Darius, of near forty miles a day, for eleven days together; so that, by the speed of his marches, he came upon his enemy before they were aware of him, and conquered them before they could be in a posture to resist him.’ Which exactly agrees with the description given of him in the prophecies of Daniel some ages before, he being set forth in them under the similitude of a panther or leopard with four wings; for he was impetuous and fierce in his warlike expeditions, as a panther after his prey, and came upon his enemies with that speed, as if he flew with a double pair of wings. And to this purpose he is, in another part of these prophecies, compared to a beast coming from the west, with that swiftness upon the king of Media and Persia, that he seemed as if his feet did not touch the ground. And his actions, as well in this comparison as in the former, fully verified the prophecy.

Re. 13:2, ‘And the beast which I saw was like a leopard.’ This is generally considered to be the symbol of Rome papal, represented as a tyrannical government, whose characters resembled those mentioned in Daniel's vision of the four monarchies, namely, rapacity, swiftness, strength, and cruelty; the leopard being the symbol of the Greeks—the bear, of the Persians—the lion, of the Babylonians. Rome papal, or the beast here represented, is said to be like unto a leopard: ‘And his feet were as those of a bear, and his mouth as the mouth of a lion;’ meaning, that in partook of the qualities of these animals, or rather of the nations whom they symbolized; in which interpretation, whatever truth there is may easily be proved by reference to the history of the papacy, from its first rise to the present hour.

LIGHTS. Lights or luminaries signify curing powers, because they show the way, and, consequently, direct and govern in their conduct, who otherwise would not know what to do, or whither to go.

Sapor, king of Persia, writing to Constantius, called himself ‘the brother of the sun and moon;’ i. e., one who ruled the world, as well as those luminaries do. Anna. Marc. b. 17.

On account of the luminaries governing the day and night, all hamartias, in the symbolic language, signify ruling powers.

And the light itself is well employed to signify the edicts, laws, rules, or directions that proceed from them for the good of their subjects. Thus, of the great King of all, the Psalmist says, Ps. 119:105, ‘Thy word is a light unto my path;’ and Ho. 6:5, ‘Thy judgments are as the light.’

In Jn. 8:12, Christ is called ‘the light of the world.’ And Tully calls Rome, as governing the world (Orat. pro Sylla), ‘the light of the nations.’ And with Philo, ‘instruction is the light of the soul.’

Agreeably to the notion of lights being the symbols of good government, light also signifies protection, deliverance, and joy.

LIGHTNING. On account of the fire attending their light, they are the symbols of edicts enforced with destruction to those who oppose them, or hinder others from giving obedience to them. Ps. 144:6; Zch. 9:14; Ps. 18:13, Re. 15:10; 18.

Thunders and lightnings, when they proceed from the throne of God, as in Re. 4:5, are fit representations of God's glorious and awful majesty; but when fire comes down from heaven upon the earth, it expresses some judgment of God on the world, as in Re. 20:9. The voices, thunders, lightnings, and great heat, in Re. 16:18-21, are interpreted expressly of an exceeding great plague, so that men blasphemed on account of it.

LION. A lion is, in general, the symbol of a king. The Mussulmans call Ali, Mahomet's son-in-law, ‘The lion of God always victorious.’ ‘To have the head of a lion portends,’ says Artemidorus, ‘obtaining of victory.’ By the head of a lion the Egyptians represented a vigilant person or guardian, the lion sleeping with his eyes open.

Ge. 49:9, Judah is styled a lion's whelp, and is compared to a lion and lioness couching, whom no one dares to rouse. The warlike character and the conquests of this tribe are here prophetically described; but the full force of the passage will not be perceived, unless we know that a lion or lioness, when lying down after satisfying its hunger, will not attack any person. Mungo Park has recorded an instance of his providential escape from a lion thus cir-cumstanced, which he saw lying near the road, and passed unhurt. Horne's Introduction, vol. ii. p. 642.

Ez. 19:2,3,

‘What was thy mother? A lioness;

In her days among lions;

In the midst of young lions she nourished her whelps;’ an allusion to Ge. 49:9, says Grotius. Judea was among the nations like a lioness among the beasts of the forest; she had strength and sovereignty. The whelp, mentioned in verse 3, means Jeohaziel, the son of Josiah, whom Pharaoh Necho put in bonds, and carried into Egypt. 2 K. 23:33,34. It is said, verse 8, ‘He was taken in their pit.’ The Arabs dig a pit where the lions are observed to enter, and, covering it slightly with reeds or small branches of trees, they frequently decoy and catch them. Pliny has taken notice of the same practice. See Shaw's Travels.

Am. 3:8, ‘The lion hath reared; who will not fear?’

The roaring of the lion is in itself one of the most terrible sounds in nature; but it becomes still more dreadful when it is known to be a sure prelude of destruction to whatever living creature comes in his way. He does not usually set up his horrid roar till he beholds his prey, and is just going to seize it. The awful admonitions uttered by the prophets are as natural a consequence of God's command, as fear is of the lion's roar.

* Frenuti leonis qualis audio tener
Timidum juvenis applicat matru latum:
At ille seruit, natre simmota, leo
Praedam minorum horribile vastis premens
Prangit, velutque; talis c. postu' sum
Te ripet hastis.’
Sen. Troad. 794.

Jo. 3:16,

‘The Lord shall roar out of Zion.’

That this expression is metaphorical, needs no remark. God's being said to roar out of Zion and Jerusalem, intimates both the courage of the Jews fighting under his protection, and the certainty of their success.

‘The heavens and the earth shall shake.’

These words are a continuation of the metaphor. As a lion, when he roars, makes the woods or plains to resound, and the beasts of the field to tremble, so God, being here compared to this fierce creature, his voice is justly said to make the very heavens and earth shake; the plain meaning of which is, all should be thrown into the utmost consternation, like a man seeing a roaring lion coming upon him to devour him, or as if he saw the very heavens and earth themselves moving, and in the utmost disorder.

Da. 7:4, ‘The first was like a lion, and had eagle's wings.’

The Chaldean or Babylonian empire is here represented. See Jer. 4:7. Its progress to what was then deemed universal empire was rapid, and therefore it has the wings of an eagle. See Jer. 48:10, and Ez. 17:3. It is said by Megasthenes and Strabo, that this power advanced as far as Spain. When its wings were plucked or torn out, that is, when it was checked in its progress by frequent defeats, it became more peaceable and humane, agreeably to that idea of the Psalmist, 92:20, ‘Bring terror upon them, O Jehovah;

And that the nations may acknowledge themselves to be but men.’

Na. 2:11,12,

‘Where is the habitation of the devouring lion?
And that which was the feeding-place of the young lions? Whether the devouring lion and the lioness went,
And the whelp of the devouring lion; and none made dread afrai,’ &c.

The allegory, as Newcome remarks, is beyond measure beautiful. Where are the inhabitants of Nineveh, who were strong and rapacious like lions? See the intrepidity of the lion well illustrated by Bochart, Hieroz. b. 3, c. 2. Both Aristotle and Alcian say that he never flies, but retires slowly. So also Homer describes him, Il. 17,108,

* So from the fold the unwilling lions parts,
Forced by loud clamors, and a storm of darts.
He flies indeed, but threatens as he flies,
With heart indignant, and retarded eyes.’

See also Pr. 28:1, and 30:30.

Is. 29:1, ‘Woe to the lion of God, the city where David dwelt.’

Jerusalem is here denoted, and the terms used appear to signify the strength of the place, by which it was enabled to resist and overcome all its enemies.

Jer. 4:7, ‘The lion is come up from his thicket.’

By this is undoubtedly meant Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon. See 50:17; and verse 6, where the same person is meant.

2 Ti. 4:17, ‘I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion.’

The general opinion is, that Nero is here meant, or rather his prefect, Aelius Caesarinus, to whom Nero committed the government of the city in his absence, with power to put whomsoever he pleased to death. So, when Theron died, Marsyas said to Agrippa, 'The lion is dead.' And so speaks Esther of Artaxerxes, 'Put a word into my mouth before the lion.' Est. 14:13.

That the same symbol should sometimes be applied to opposite characters, is no way surprising nor inconsistent, since different qualities may reside in the symbol, of which the good may be referred to one, the bad to another. Thus in the lion reside courage, and victory over antagonists. In these respects it may be, and is, employed as a symbol of Jesus Christ, who is called the Lion of the tribe of Judah, Re. 5:5; whose emblem the lion was; see Ge. 49:9; the whole Jewish polity being called a lion, on account of the singular firmness and ability of its government, which lasted till the time of Christ, and was merged in Him, who from that time became eminently the Lion of the tribe of Judah. The figure of a lion was carried on its standard, according to Mede and others, on which are said to have been inscribed these words:

'Arise, O Jehovah! let thine enemies be scattered,
And let all them that hate Thee flee before Thee.'

See Glassius, Philol. Sacra, p. 750.

In the lion reside also fierceness and rapacity. In this point of view, it is used as a fit figure for Satan, I Pe. 5:8; for Nero, as above, and generally for wicked and rapacious conquerors and tyrants, as in many passages of Scripture, some of which have been already quoted.

The same takes place in regard to the unicorn, which, in Ps. 92:10, is applied to the pions; while in Ps. 22:31, it seems to be meant of the ungodly. The term leaven, also, is in one place used to denote the sound doctrine of the kingdom of heaven; in another, the false doctrine of the Pharisees. See Mat. 13:33, and 16:6.

LOCUST. In the sacred writings, the locust is every where the symbol of hostile armies; for these insects always appear in large companies or troops, and, from their destructive qualities, are considered as enemies. See Jer. 46:23,

'Cut down her forest, (i. e. her people or cities,) saith Jehovah.'

That it may not be found on searching;
Although they surpass the locusts in multitude,
And they are without number.'

Na. 3:15,

'There shall the fire devour thee;
The sword shall cut thee off; it shall devour thee as the locust.'

Increase thyself as the locust,
Increase thyself as the numerous locust.'

Na. 3:17,

'They crowned princes are as the numerous locust,
And thy captains as the grasshoppers,
Which encamp in the fens in the cold day;
But when the sun ariseth, they depart,
And their place is not known where they are.'

See also De. 28:38-42, Ps. 78:46. Am. 7:1.

God made use of them as a hostile army, to execute his judgments; hence the first great plague on Egypt arose from their visitation, Ex. ch. 10. There they are represented as coming from the East, i. e. from Arabia, the neighboring country. And in Jud. 6:3-6, and 7:12, 'the children of the East,' meaning the Arabians, are compared to locusts for multitude, and as committing the same damage. See also 1 K. 4:30, where Solomon's wisdom is said to have excelled the wisdom of all 'the children of the East,' and all the wisdom of Egypt.

See also the invasion of the locusts described by Joel, in the first two chapters of his prophecy; from which place, and from that in Ex. ch. 10, the expressions in Re. ch. 9 are plainly borrowed.

The Eastern interpreters of dream explain the appearance of locusts in a similar manner. 'The locust,' say they, 'generally refers to a multitude of enemies. They march, by divine command, like an army for the destruction of kingdoms. If any king or potentate shall dream of locusts coming to any country, in that place he may expect a multitude of powerful enemies.' And Rabbi Tanchum, on Jn. 14:6, says, 'In it is no way unreasonable to affirm, that in the things which relate concerning the nature of locusts and their actions, there is a parabolic expression of the invasion of enemies, their multitude, and the devastation and ruin of that country.' Josephus, de Bello Jud. b. 5, c. 7, observes, in like manner, 'As, after locusts, we see the woods stripped of their leaves, so, in the rear of Simon's army, nothing but desolation remained.'

Locusts are said to be produced in the earth. Pliny says, 'Locustae nascentur in rimosis locis.' And this insect has its name in Hebrew from geb, goub, or geba, which signifies a pit, ditch, or pool. The mystic locusts in the Apocalypse are hence said to have proceeded from the pit or abyss. But the locusts of the Apocalypse seem to have some affinity to another creature, viz. the scorpion, and therefore may be termed scorpion-locusts; and their pain or torment is compared to that of a scorpion when he strikes a man.

The teeth of the locust are very strong and sharp, as those of a lion are. Pliny, as cited by Bochart, writes of the locusts, that they bite through every thing, and even the doors of houses. So that Jerome upon the place very justly cries out, 'What is more innumerable or stronger than the locusts, which no human industry can resist?' The same comparison we have in Re. 9:8, 'Their teeth were as the teeth of lions.'

The locust has a head very much resembling that of a horse; hence the Italians call them cavallette, i. e. little horses. Joel notices this, 2:4; and St. John makes the same comparison, Re. 9:7. The Arabians describe them in the same manner: they say, 'The appearance of horses adorns their heads and countenance.' But both Joel and St. John may be considered not so much to refer to the natural appearance, as to the properties of the insect; namely, its fierceness and swift motion. Thus, the apostle says, not merely horses, but horses prepared unto battle; furious and impatient for the war. Like Virgil's description —

'Nec vanos horret strepho —
Stare loco nescit, micta curvis, et tremit artus,
Collectumque prouincia volvit sub naribus lenem,'

Georg. 3.

Their wings also are mentioned as making a noise. Bochart says, that they may be heard at six miles distance; and that, when they are eating the fruits of the earth, the sound of them is like that of a flame driven by the wind. Joel likens it to the noise of chariots on the tops of the mountains, 2:5; and St. John uses nearly the same simile — 'The sound of their wings was as the sound of chariots of many horses running to battle.'

The natural locust has a very hard skin, in appearance like scales or armor. Hence Claudian thus names them, Epigr. 33,

'Cognatus dorso dureat amictus;
Armatu natura eum,' &c.

Hence Joel says, 2:8, 'When they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded.' And the apocalyptic locusts are described as having breastplates like breastplates of iron?

As these symbolical locusts hartmen, Re. 9:4, which the natural locusts do not, further than by injuring vegetation, we are at once led to infer, that they are to be understood of a class of persons, who resemble that insect in some of its more remarkable qualities; such as number, noisiness, and capacity of devastation, especially when they are portrayed as having, verse 7, 'human faces'; and, verse 8, 'hair like women'; 'golden corolets,' or turcans and the like; all which could only be affined of those whom the locust symbolizes.

The time of their continuance is said to be five months, the usual time of the appearance of these insects, which is only in four or five months of the year. They begin to appear in spring, about a month after the equinox, and are only seen at most during part of April, May, June, July, and August, and part of September. These locusts were accounted the most dreadful plague; insomuch that those who were instrumental in delivering any nation from them, were repaid with divine honors. Thus the Celts named Hercules Cornopion, from cornops, a locust, and worshipped him under that character, because he drove away the locusts from them.

Almost all interpreters agree, that by the locusts in the Apocalypse, the Saracens are meant, and the rise of the Mahometan impudence and power, about the year 606. Mede, Daubuz, Lowman, and Bishop Newton, all agree on this subject; and, indeed, the coincidence is so striking between the prophetic description and the actual history, there is no resisting the evidence of it. But without determining positively in a matter respecting which so many have erred, it may be sufficient to remark, that could this point, of the application of the locusts to the Saracens, be well and satisfactorily ascertained, it would be of great importance, inasmuch as we should then have a landmark in the region of prophecy, from whence we could look either backward into the past, or prospectively into the future, as from a fixed date or era, so as to give greater confidence in the interpretation of the other mystic visions of the Apocalypse.

The points of coincidence may be seen well stated by Bishop Newton, and by Mede; but they would be too long for this place.

If, by the corolets or turcans, we are to understand the ensigns of regal power, we may with Mede suppose them to refer to the numerous nations subdued by the victories of the Saracens in an incredibly short space of time. For, in the space of eighty or ninety years, they had overrun and subjected Palestine, Syria, Armenia, nearly all the Lesser Asia, Persia, India, Egypt, Numidia, all Barbary as far as the river Niger, Portugal, and Spain. They afterwards added a great part of Italy, Sicily, Candia, Cyprus, and other islands of the Mediterranean Sea. So that they might well be said to be crowned locusts, from the multitude of kingdoms they subdued.

They are said to continue five months; and as five months of thirty days make 150 days, reckoning each day for a year, so their continuance or duration was to be 150 years, which, if computed from A. D. 632, the year of Mahomet's death, would bring the period down to 782. But Mede reckons it from A. D. 630 to 980; and Daubuz, from 612 to 762, each assigning reasons for his mode of computation; for which see their works.

LOVE. To love, in Scripture, signifies to adhere or cleave to, as in Ge. 34:3; 'His soul cleaved unto Dinah, and he loved the damsel.'

And so in 11:12; 30:20.

On the contrary, to hate, is to forsake. Thus, in Ro. 12:9, 'Abhor that which is evil, and cleave to that which is good.'

In Is. 60:15, forsaken and hated are put as synonymous.

Thus a man must forsake or leave him, to follow and obey Christ, when it stands in competition.

Thus God hated Esau, that is, passed by him, when He preferred before him his younger brother Jacob, in entitling Jacob to greater worldly privileges, and entering into a closer covenant with him. See Ma. 1:2,3. The meaning is, that God chose rather to make the posterity of Jacob a greater nation than the posterity of Esau. For the words Jacob and Esau are not to be understood of their persons, but of their offspring, as is evident from what was said of them by God to their mother, before they were born, Ge. 25:23, 'Two nations are in thy womb, (i. e. the Edomites and the Jews,) and two manner of people shall be separated from the bowels; and the one people shall be stronger than the other; and the elder shall serve the younger.'

M.

MANNA. The miraculous food with which God fed his people Israel during forty years in the wilderness.

In Ps. 78:25, it is called angels' food in our version; but this is absurd. The word abirim there signifies strong ones, and by Durell is translated oxen, as in Ps. 22:12, 50:13, 68:30, Is. 34:7. Jer. 50:11. He therefore renders it thus:

'Every one ate the flesh of oxen;
He sent them venison (or victuals) in plenty.'

But Parkhurst, with more propriety, renders it 'bread of the strong ones,' meaning by that the material heavens, for in the preceding sentence it is called 'corn of the heavens.' See his note on Abir, Heb. Lex. p. 4.

Manna is the emblem or symbol of immortality, Ro. 2:17, 'I will give him to eat of the hidden manna'; i. e. the true bread of God, which came down from heaven, referring to the words of Christ, in Jn. 6:51, a much greater instance of God's favor, than feeding the Israelites with manna in the wilderness. It is called hidden, or laid up, in allusion to that which was laid up in a golden vessel in the holy of holies of the tabernacle. Comp. Ex. 16:33,34, and He. 9:4.

It is in a subordinate sense only, that what dropped from the clouds, and was sent for the nourishment of the body, still mortal, could be called the 'bread of heaven,' being but a type of that which hath descended from the heaven of heavens, for nourishing the immortal soul unto eternal life, and which is, therefore, in the sublimest sense, the bread of heaven. The original manna was corruptible, and they who ate thereof died; but those who partake of this shall never hunger, but shall live forever. The immortality which it procures, transcends all imagination.

In Lu. 14:15, a person is recorded as saying, 'Blessed is that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God,' probably in allusion to the manna. To eat bread is a well-known Hebrew idiom for to share in a repast, whether it be at a common meal, or at a sumptuous feast.

MAN OF SIN — SON OF PERDITION — LAWLESS ONE. 2 Th. 2:3, &c.

The figurative description of an eminently impious and wicked power, whose rise was to be contemporary with the 'apostasy,' or general defection from God and from genuine Christianity. He is called the man of sin, as being eminently wicked; the son of perdition, as being destined to certain destruction; the lawless one, as setting himself up above all law, human and divine.

He is said to oppose God, as being peculiarly an adversary to truth and righteousness; and to exalt himself above God, as being guilty of the most impious arrogance, as proudly raising himself above all institutions of religious worship, by assuming to alter and set aside all the divine appointments of religion and worship.

He is said to sit in the temple of God as if he were God; i. e. he shall seize the primacy or sovereignty of the churches of Christ, and usurp the authority of the King of Zion. But properly, instead of sit, it should be seate himself, denoting his insolent and violent intrusion of himself into God's church as lawgiver and ruler.

Show thyself, or rather 'publicly declaring himself,' that he is a God; i. e. impiously assuming divine powers and privileges, and arrogating that submission and obedience in matters pertaining to the conscience, which are due only to God.

An event, or order of things, is said to restrain his appearance, and he could not be revealed till that was removed. All the fathers considered this to mean the imperial power of Rome, which then maintained its own sovereignty, and prevented the usurpation alluded to. See Tertullian's Apology, and his treatise on the Resurrection, where he says, 'until he be taken out of the way, — who, but the Roman empire, which, being dispersed into ten kings, shall introduce Antichrist.' ch. xxv.

The poets and Roman writers in general having flattered the Caesars, (see Virgil, 'En. I., 231, &c.) and given to Rome the title of the eternal city, it would not have been safe for Paul to have spoken more openly on this subject, whatever he might say to the Thessalonians in private, in explanation of his meaning. And therefore he says, 'Ye know what withholdeth,' &c.

This 'mystery of iniquity,' or concealed wickedness, was even then in operation, and was exerting itself covertly, till he who restrained it, 'the imperial government,' was taken out of the way. The expression 'taken out of the way,' perhaps importing the violent deaths by which many of the Roman emperors perished, and the dreadful struggles and convulsions which preceded the dissolution of the empire itself.

It is further said, that the Lord will consume; i. e. gradually destroy this lawless one, or usurping and tyrannical power, by the spirit or breath of his mouth; i. e. by the word of his gospel, and the prevalence of the doctrine of Christ, which should supersede the errors, and expose the impostures of Antichrist.

And destroy him, or render ineffectual, by the brightness of his coming; i. e. by breaking down his authority, reducing his influence, and bringing him to a state of inactivity and impotence.

The coming of the lawless one is described to be according to the operation of Satan; i. e. invariably and imperceptibly — yet effectually by the use of false miracles, spurious pretences, counterfeit signs, and all the apparatus of imposture, or, as Paul expresses it, with every kind of unrighteous deception; meaning, that he would scruple no arts or deceptions that might support and perpetuate his own usurpation.

Those who are deceived by him, are said to be those that perish, because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. And, therefore, God abandoned them to strong delusion, so as to give credit to a lie. And having wilfully banished the truth from their minds, they rendered themselves liable to the righteous condemnation of God, as persons who had made iniquity their choice, and who preferred error to truth, as being most favorable to the indulgence of their criminal passions.

No man of understanding can be at a loss for the right application of this portion of Scripture, that it cannot reasonably be expounded of one or two particular deceivers, who arose, appeared, and perished; but of a power of great extent and of considerable duration, whose rise was gradual, his assumption of sovereignty progressive, and whose downfall may occupy a period proportioned to his rise. But see Whitby, Macknight, and Chandler in particular, and the commentators in general.

MARRIAGE is symbolically used to signify a state, and reason or cause of great joy and happiness. A man is not perfect till marriage; there is something till then wanting to make him complete in his circumstances, according to the divine institution. Ge. 2:18.

Therefore marriage by the Greeks was called τέλος, perfection. And a bride, in Hebrew, is called תֵּבֶת, kee, that is, a perfect one, from κερα, to perfect or consummate.

Wife, according to the Indian Interpreter, ch. 123, is the symbol of the power and authority of her husband; and as he dreams of seeing her well or ill dressed, so he shall meet with joy or affliction.

The church of God, under the Old Testament, is sometimes spoken of as the spouse of God, in terms borrowed from the marriage covenant. She is the barren woman that did not bear, and was desolate; she is exhorted to rejoice, in Is. 54:1-6, on the reconciliation of her husband, and on the accession of the Gentiles to her family.

The same union is hinted at by the apostle, in writing to the Ephesians, 5:23, as subsisting between Christ and the church.

See also Is. 62:5, and 2 Co. 12:9, where Paul says, 'For I have espoused you to one husband, that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.'

In the visions of John, a period is spoken of, when the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his bride hath made herself ready. Re. 19:7. As marriages were used to be celebrated with great joy, the marriage of the Lamb with his church is a fit emblem to show the state of prosperity and happiness to which God will raise it, after all its sufferings for the sake of truth and righteousness.

MARSHES. There is not much said of these in the Scriptures; but they appear to be considered as the emblems of barrenness. They are in their own nature unfruitful and insubstantial, resembling the Dead Sea, or sea of Sodom, that dismal example of divine justice; and in that sense may be viewed as representing those who, notwithstanding the motions of God's Spirit, and the means used for their improvement, are utterly unproductive of good.

In Ez. 47:11, it is said, 'As for the marshes and pits, they shall not be healed'; i. e. they shall remain filled with salt water, &c. The allegorical sense is, that some shall reject the gospel, and none shall receive it without obeying it.

Italy and Spain, in Europe, and many other countries throughout the world, may be viewed as in this marshy state, a state of olddrudery, error, and spiritual death. See Vitruva de Palindibus.

MEASURE. To measure and to divide are the same; and both signify to go about to take possession, after the division. Hence a lot, or division, or inheritance, are all one; because the Israelites got possession of the promised land by division, measure, and lot.

And to divide the spoils is to get a great booty or victory, because division of the spoils is a consequence of the other. See Nu. 24:17, 33:51, Jos. 1:16, 13:6, Is. 9:3, 53:12.

To mete out is the same. Thus, Ps. 60:5, 'I will divide Shechem, and mete out the valley of Simeon,' signifies an entire possession after a victory, which God had promised to David.

So, in Is. 18:2, a nation that is meted out and tred down, is a nation overcome by its enemies, and quite subdued; so that its possessions are divided and possessed by the conquerors.

So when, in Jos. 21:3, God says, 'I have divided unto you by lot those nations that remain,' what is this but to say, that God had put them in possession of their lands? So, in Zeb. 2:2, to measure Jerusalem, is again to take possession of it, to rebuild it; or at least to repair that, and rebuild the temple. See also Am. 7:17.

The same notion is also in the heathen authors. Thus, in Horace, immutata regia, lands unmeasured, b. 3, Od. 21, v. 12, signify, not possessed by any property to them, but common; whence the fruits of such lands are called by the poet, libera, free to any one to take. See also Virgil, Georg. I., v. 196, 127.

MILK AND HONEY. The emblems of fertility.

Bochart, Hieroz. p. 2, b. 4, c. 12, observes, that this phrase occurs about twenty times in the Scriptures, and that it is an image frequently used in the classics, as in Euripides, Baer. 112, thus translated by Wodfull:

'Rills of milk, and rills of wine,
Madden the enchanted land;
For here the bee's nectareous treasures stream,
And Syrian frankincense perfumes thy shrine.'

Josephus represents Galilee as wholly under culture, and every where fruitful; as throughout abounding in pictures, planted with all kinds of trees, and inciting, by the good quality of the land, those who are least disposed to the labor of tillage. See also Shaw's Travels, and Maundrell's.

Milk sometimes denotes the undiluted word of God, as in 1 Pe. 2:2, compared with Is. 55:1.

It also signifies the elementary parts or rudiments of the Christian doctrine. 1 Co. 3:2, He. 5:12, 13.

MOON. The moon has generally been considered by divines to be a symbol of the church of God, but on what grounds it is difficult to discover. It would seem as if the notion had been taken up principally on the supposition that Solomon's Song has a secondary or mystical sense, representing the union of Christ with the church, though neither the name of God nor of Christ is once mentioned in it, nor is it ever quoted, or even alluded to, in the New Testament. In Song 6:10, the bride is said to be 'fair as the moon'; but that the church is that bride, is no where affirmed. Were it otherwise, the sun also might be supposed to be an emblem of the church; for the same bride in the same verse, said to be 'clear as the sun.' Even were it so, the passage amounts to no more than a simple comparison, 'fair as the moon'; in the same manner as Asaph 'was light of foot as a roe' 2 S. 2:18. Some divines, however, determined to find the church every where, fix on this passage among others, and inform us, that the church is so called, because of her brightness, which she derives from Christ, 'the Sun of righteousness,' as the moon does her light from the natural sun; and to intimate, that the church, like the moon, may have her eclipses, and be in darkness for a time. But if the woman mentioned in Re. 12:1 be intended to represent the church, which is the opinion of most interpreters, then she is described as having the moon under her feet, which, in other words, would be treading upon herself, — a picture not very natural.

The fathers first led the way to the interpretation of the moon as a symbol of the church, as has been proved from their writings by several authors.

The moon has also been considered to be the emblem of the human judgment or intellect, in Ez. 12:2, but erroneously; for Solomon is there merely describing the general condition of old age, under the figure of a climate where the sun seldom appears, where the sky is overspread with clouds, and heavy rains are frequent.

As a proof how easily men of fertile imaginations can find a resemblance anywhere, I may be allowed to quote the following from a Danish author: 'The moon,' says he, 'is the symbol of the church; for,

'1. The moon is raised above the earth, and the church hath her citizenship in heaven. Phil. 3:20.

'2. The moon is a dark body in itself, and borrows its light from the sun; in like manner the church has no light but what she receives from the Savior.

'3. The nearer the moon is to the sun, the less brilliant she appears; so the more the rays of the divine light are thrown upon the church, the more her misery and her poverty are discovered.

'4. The moon is continually revolving, and is called by the poets 'the wandering moon,' luna vagus; so the church militant is a pilgrim and stranger, and has no abiding-place here.

'5. The moon has her different phases or aspects, waxing and waning in turn; so the church increases in times of peace, and decreases in seasons of persecution, in numbers and stability, while her purity and soundness are reversely affected.'

And so forth; for the grounds of comparison are multiplied.

If it be asked, Of what, then, is the moon symbolical? the answer is, the sun, moon, and stars, denote different degrees of rank, power, and authority, in a family or state. Thus, in Joseph's dream, the sun represented Jacob the head, the moon his wife, as the next in order, and the stars his sons. When spoken of a kingdom, the sun is the symbol of the king himself, and the moon of the next to him in power, whether it be the queen, the prince royal, or the prime minister. If kings are sometimes called stars, like the king of Babylon, Is. 14:17, it is when they are not compared with their own nobles or princes, but with other kings.

In Re. 12:12, it is said, 'the third part of the moon was smitten.'

In the figurative language, the darkening of any of the heavenly bodies denotes a defect in government, a downfall of power, a revolt, or political extinction. And if the pagan Roman empire be here meant, then it is a third portion of the primary powers denoted by the sun, and of the secondary powers signified by the moon, that is to be extinguished. See Jer. 33:16, Is. 13:10, 11; Ez. 32:7, 8. This is supposed to have been fulfilled between the years 536 and 535, when Belisarius and the Goths alternately besieged and took Rome, and reduced it to a mere Duchy.

Re. 12:1, 'a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet.'

This is understood to be a symbolical representation of the church, clothed with sumptuous, expressive of high honor and dignity; and standing on the moon, as being above the low condition of this sublunar world.

MOTHER. Father and mother are words which, in all languages, may figuratively signify author or producer of a thing.

A city which has great dominions under it, and consequently several other cities, is frequently called a mother, in respect of those cities, which are therefore, by analogy, her daughters. See Ez. ch. 23. Ro. 2:15, 4:5. Is. 50:12.

A city may be called a mother in respect of the inhabitants, as in Is. 49:23; and therefore, in the symbolical language, mother is explained of the patria, or country, or city. See Susanna in Jul. Cas. § 7; and Artemidora, b. 2, c. 82.

See 2 S. 20:19. Job. 17:16. Nu. 21:25. Jnd. 11:26, &c.

The name is sometime transferred to signify the New Testament church, as in Ga. 4:26, which should have been rendered, ‘But the Jerusalem, which is from above, represents, or corresponds to, the free woman, who is the mother of us all,’ i. e. of all Christians; according to the allegory in which the bond-woman answers to the Jews, the natural descendants of Abraham, whose capital is Jerusalem on this earth.

In Na. 3:8, where populous No or No Ammon is mentioned, the inhabitants are called, in verse 10, her young children. Some have supposed No to mean Alexandria, the great emporium of Egypt; and the Chaldee and Vulgate have rendered accordingly. But Alexandria was not built at the time when Jeremiah prophesied; and it does not appear that there had been before any considerable city, at least, standing on the spot, which the founder made the object of his choice. No was more probably Thebes, which was called Diacropolis, on account of the temple of Jupiter Ammon, who was worshipped there in a distinguished manner.

Re. 17:5, ‘the mother of harlots and abominations of the earth’; ² i. e. a chief promoter of idolatry and superstition, by whose authority it was propagated among the nations.

Ez. 16:4, ‘Thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother a Hittite;’ ³ i. e. their degenerate and idolatrous conduct was suitable to such a descent. Jn. 8:44. It is the language of indignation and reproach, like ‘Duris genitio cautius horrore Caucasus.’

Æn. 4, 355.

See Newcome in loc.

Ez. 11:21, ‘The parting of the way, at the head of two ways,’ is, in Hebrew, the mother, because out of it these two ways arise as daughters.

On our Lord’s words, in Mat. 12:48, ‘Who is my mother?’ see Erasmus’s excellent paraphrase.

MOUNTAIN. The governing part of the political world appears under symbols of different species, being variously represented, according to the various kinds of allegories.

If the allegory be fetched from the heavens, then the luminaries denote the governing part; if from an animal, the head or horns; if from the earth, a mountain or fortress; and in this case the capital city or residence of the governor is taken for the supreme, by which it happens that these mutually illustrate each other.

So a capital city is the head of the political body; the head of an ox is the fortress of the animal; mountains are the natural fortresses of the earth, and therefore a fortress or capital city, though set in a plain, level ground, may be called a mountain.

Thus head, mountain, hill, city, horn, and king, are in a number synonymous terms to signify a kingdom, or monarchy, or republic, united under one government, only with this difference, that it is to be understood in different respects; for the head represents it in respect of the capital city; mountain or hill, in respect of the strength of the metropolis, which gives law to, or is above, and commands the adjacent territories, and the like.

Thus, concerning the kingdom of the Messiah, Isaiah says, 22,

‘It shall come to pass in the latter days, The mountain of the house of Jehovah shall be established on the top of the mountains, And it shall be exalted above the hills, And all nations shall flow unto it.’

And 11:9, ‘They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain,’ that is, in all the kingdom of the Messiah, which shall then reign all over the world; for it follows, ‘the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord.’

So the whole Assyrian monarchy, or Babylon, for all its dominions, is called a mountain in Zch. 4:7, and Jer. 51:25, in which last place the Targum has a fortress; just as Virgil, in his Æneid, b. 6, v. 733, calls the seven hills of Rome, arcæ, or fortresses, though there was not one Capitol — ‘Septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arcæ.’

Thus also, in Da. 2:35, ‘The stone that smote the image, became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth;’ that is, the kingdom of the Messiah, having destroyed the four monarchies, became a universal monarchy, as it is plainly made out in verses 41, 45.

In this view, then, a mountain is the symbol of a kingdom, or of a capital city with its dominions, or of a king, which is the same.

Mountain are frequently used to signify all places of strength of what kind soever, and to whatever use applied; mountains being difficult of access to an enemy, and overarching and commanding the country round about, being properly qualified, both to secure what is on them, and to protect and govern what is about them. See Jnr. 3:23.

Among the heathens, persons of great note and eminence were buried in or under mountains; tombs were erected over them in honor of their memory, and by degrees their souls became the objects of worship.

This gave rise to a custom of building temples and places of worship upon mountains. And though these temples were not always, strictly speaking, the very monuments of the heroes deceased, yet the bare invocation was supposed to call the soul thither, and to make the very place a sepulchral monument, as Thucydides proves from Virgil, Æn. h. 3, v. 67, and h. 6, v. 55. And therefore Servius on Virgil’s Æneid, b. 3, p. 701, observes, that human souls are by sacrifice turned into deities. For which see Lycophron’s Cassandra, v. 927, 1123, and from v. 1126 to 1149.

The said temples were also built like fortresses, as appears from Jnd. 9:46, 48, 49, where the temple of the god Berith is called in the original, ‘the tower of the house, or the tower, the house of the god Berith.’

They were likewise places of asylum, and beyond all, were looked upon as the fortresses and defenders of the worshippers, by reason of the presence of the false deities, and of the relics of deceased men kept therein within the sanctuaries.

Thus, in Euripides, Hern. I. v. 1030, &c., we find, that the heroes in their tombs were esteemed as saviors and defenders of the people.

Tully, de Nat. Deor. lib. I, fin.; Clemens Alexandrinus, Protrept. p. 13; Arnobius ad Gentes, h. 6, and Lactantius de f. Rel. I, c. 15, give examples of dead men worshipped, upon the supposition that the presence of their reliques fixed the demon to the place, and protected those for whom they had a kindness when alive.

Hence the Spartans in distress were by an oracle directed to get the bones of their ancestors and the Athenians in the like case were commanded to find the bones of Theseus. Herod. b. 6:7; Pausan. Lacon. p. 84.

Pausanias having observed, that the bones of Aristomenes, the Messenian hero, were brought to the new Messene, and there gave birth to prodigies, gives a reason for it, brought from the immortality of the soul, by which he supposes, that souls in the separate state keep still their thoughts and affections as before, and by consequence assist their votaries in suitable enterprises; on which account their reliques were thought to do wonders.

So the shield of that hero was thought to have helped the Theban army against the Laconians.

This notion may be traced up as high as Herodot. Op. b. I, v. 121. It was the foundation of all idolatry, and was improved by the supposition that without the reliques, as was before observed, the invocation with sacrifices might turn human souls into deities.

Upon the accounts now given, mountains were the forts of paganism, and, therefore, in several parts of Scripture, mountains signify the idolatrous temples and places of worship; as in Ez. 6:2-5; Jer. 2:23; Mt. 4:1.

And thus mountain, by the rule of analogy, may be properly used in respect of the monasteries and churches of the Christian church when corrupted by the introduction of saints and images. The absurd notion of the heathens concerning dead heroes was soon extinguished by the new converts to Christianity in relation to the martyrs or their reliques. And the fury of the people at lat. was so great, that they raised up altars in every place to the martyrs without reliques, helping out the deficiency with dreams and revelations. By which all their altars are become tombs of the dead, as were those of the pagans, and their churches the houses of their protectors and saviors; all the difference being, that they have taken the martyrs or heroes of the church instead of those of paganism.

It is also observable, that, anciently, monasteries were built upon mountains, and built like forts. Those in the Greek church were certainly so, as appears by several authors, as Cyril of Alexandria, and St. Chrysostom, who therefore call the monks ‘the dwellers on the mountains.’ On Mount Athos, there are still twenty-two monasteries, and about 6000 monks in them. In this, they are conformable to their pattern, the Therapeuta of Philo, who dwelt upon a mountain, and whose cells were called monasteries.

In the Ethiopic language, the same word, viz. dabuyr, signifies a mountain and a monastery. The very etymology of the word helps out the signification of the symbol. For dabir, a mountain, comes from daber, to command, subdue, and govern. So, in military language, mountains are said to command the places about them; and accordingly the monasteries were the forts or mountains of Popery, and so many authors have styled them. See further illustrations in Danubz.

Selden and Pococke think that Baal-Pear, mentioned in Eo. 9:10, was so called from the mountain on which he was worshipped. See Nu. 25:3, and 23:28. Ps. 106:28.

So Jupiter had the additional name of Olympius, and Mercury of Ulyssenus. Ez. 12:1, ‘Set thy face towards the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them.’ See De. 12:2. Jer. 29, 30, 18:3.

Philip, second king of Macedon, in his expedition against Sparta, sacrificed to the gods on each of the hills, one of which was called Olympus, and the other Eva. Polyb. b. 5, p. 372.

Cyrus, just before his death, offered sacrifice to Jupiter, the sun, and the other gods, upon the mountains. Cyrop. b. 8, p. 547, ed. Hutch.

Jupiter speaks of Hector as sacrificing to him on the summits of Ida. See II. 22, 171.

Great disorders and commotions, especially when kingdoms are moved by hostile invasions, are expressed in the prophetic style, by carrying or casting mountains into the midst of the sea. See Ps. 46:2.

‘Therefore we will not fear though the earth be removed, And though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea.’

It is said, in Re. 16:20, ‘And every island fled away, and the mountains were not found.’ The phrase is taken from those mighty earthquakes, in which every thing is thrown into confusion, and even mountains are swallowed up, or change their forms. See Re. 6:14.

These mystic mountains, in the Apocalypse, mean kingdoms and states, which were no longer found, because overturned to make way for the kingdom of Christ, mentioned by Daniel, which was to fill the whole earth.

When David says, Ps. 30:7, ‘Lord, by thy favor Thou hast made my mountain to stand strong,’ he means, the stability of his kingdom.

Vitrinus, in commenting on Is. 2:14, ‘and upon all the high mountains,’ &c., has these words — ‘Hoc est, ad subvertenda regna et res publicas, sive societates maiores et minores, quae suis limitibus circumscripuntur, si pro sint confundate, alte in mundo eminente, celebres sint fauna amphibitinis, potentie, auctoritatibus, adeo ut difficilem adveniat, destruantur ac loco moveantur. Vire gerunt figuram et emblemum et columnam.’

MOUTH, according to the oenocritics, denotes the house of the party; and by analogy, the teeth are the servants of the household.

The mouth also signifies the words that proceed out of it, which, in the sacred style, are the same as commands and actions, because they imply the effects of the thoughts; words or commands being the means used to communicate the thoughts and decrees to those that are to execute them.

Hence, for a person or thing to come out of the mouth of another, signifies to be constituted and commanded to become an agent or minister under a superior power. Thus:

Re. 16:13, ‘I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet.’

Re. 16:14, ‘For they are the spirits of devils working miracles,’ &c.

Re. 1:16, ‘Out of his mouth went a sharp sword.’

Re. 11:4, ‘He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth.’

Re. 12:15, ‘The serpent cast out of his mouth water.’

Re. 19:10, ‘Their power is in their mouths, and in their tails.’

Re. 11:5, ‘If any hurt them, fire proceedeth out of their mouth.’

The Word of God, or the word that proceeds out of his mouth, signifies sometimes the actions of God’s providence, his commands, whereby He rules the worlds, and brings all things to his purpose; and sometimes that Divine Person, or emanated substance of Himself, who executes his commands as a minister, and, by a metonymy, of the abstract for the concrete, usual in holy writ, and, in the Eastern nations, is called the Word of God.

MYRTLE. The myrtle-tree was an emblem of peace.

It is mentioned in the following passages — No. 8:15, 18, 41:19, 53:13; Zeph. 1:8.

The Hebrew term is Hodesh, from which Hadasah, the original name of Esther. The note of the Chaldee Targum on this passage seems remarkable: ‘They called her Hodesh or Hadasah, because she was just, and the just are those that are compared to myrtles.’

The Jews had a proverb, ‘The myrtle standing among nettles, is still called a myrtle,’ meaning, that a godly man living amongst the wicked is still a godly man, like Lot in Sodom.

Catullus celebrates it, Eleg. 12:

* Boni con bona
Nuptio satis ex quo;
Purpura rubea cutens
Myrtus Asiae rambusa;

and Lucretius admires its beauty, in Amor. v. 4, pappos, &c., ‘the myrtle, and several other trees, which excel in beauty.’

On which account Pantusius says it was dedicated to Venus, along with the rose.

And hence Virgil has, Erbog. 7,

* Eponae myrtos Veneri, sua laures Phœbo.

In external beauty and fragrance, it is considered to be a fit emblem of the Christian church, as adorned with the various graces of the Spirit.

The myrtle is a lowly and tender shrub, and therefore the more resembles the saints. Horace applies to it the epithet fragiles, frail; and Virgil calls it tenuis, tender. And Aristophanes terms it ταρσεία ψυχή, virgin-myrtle. It is very fragrant; hence Horace, lib. 2, Od. 15:

* Myrtos, et omnis copia natiūm,
Spargens olivæ cōstrem.

Fertilizes.

And Athenaeus, lib. 15, Deipnosophistæ, observes, that the Egyptian myrtle is acknowledged to excel all others in the sweetness of its fragrance, as Theophrastus writes.

And Ovid, lib. 3, Art. Amor. v. 690,

* Ros maris et lauri, nigrae myrus aluit.

The myrtle is an evergreen. So the Jews, in their Targum, say of Esther: The name of Esther is Hadasah, or myrtle; for, as the myrtle never withers, winter or summer, so the righteous always flourish, both in this world and that which is to come.

It was used at feasts, as Horace remarks, b. 1, Od. 4:

* Nunc decepta virili ostendit caput impediens myro,

Aut flore, terra quem ferunt solitus.

And Josephus mentions, that at the feast of tabernacles they carried branches of myrtle in their hands.

N.

NAKEDNESS signifies sin or folly. Thus, in Ge. 3:7, it is taken for sin in general. And in Ex. 32:25, and Ez. 16:36, and 2 Chr. 28:19, for idolatry. And so elsewhere in the Scriptures all kinds of vice, but idolatry in particular, come under the notion of filthiness, or nakedness, or sores. And therefore to be in the highest degree naked, is to be guilty of idolatry.

Nakedness signifies also guilt, shame, poverty, or misery, as being the consequence of punishment of sin, and of idolatry in particular, a crime which God never leaves unpunished. Thus, in Jer. 49:10, ‘I have made Esau bare,’ &c. signifies the destruction of Esau, God having exposed them naked and defenseless to the invaders. So, in Is. 47:3,

‘Thy nakedness shall be uncovered; and thy shame shall be seen,’ is interpreted in the next line by

‘I will take full vengeance, neither will I suffer man to intercede with Me.’

in other words, Babylon will be humbled, and made a slave.

The Indian interpreter explains this symbol of distress, poverty, and disgrace.

The nakedness of enemies is explained by the interpreters of omens, as signifying, that by some discovery of their secrets, a way would be made to vanquish them in the end. See a remarkable instance in Procopius, quoted by Danubius.

The nakedness of a land, Ge. 42:9, signifies the weak and ruined parts of it, where the country lies most open and exposed to danger.

There is an admonition in Re. 16:15, couched in terms which include this symbol: ‘Behold I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame;’ i. e. let all who would faithfully persevere, watch over themselves, to maintain their purity and integrity, lest when Christ comes they be exposed to disgrace, and have no covering for their sin and folly.

NAME. The name of a person or thing, according to the Hebrew style, frequently imports the quality or state thereof. Thus, in

Rev. 14:8, ‘And she said unto them, Call me not Naomi,’ i. e. pleasant, ‘but call me Mara,’ i. e. bitter; for the Almighty hath dealt very bitterly with me.’

And thus, when it is said, in Is. ch. 9, ‘He shall be called Immanuel,’ the meaning is, that the Son there spoken of shall be God with us, dwelling amongst us. And so in Lu. 1:32, ‘He shall be called the Son of the Highest,’ is he shall be the Son of the Highest.

And thus, in Thucydides, b. 5, § 9, ‘To be called the allies of the Lacedemonians,’ is the same as to be their allies, and have effectually the honor and advantage of that title.

Agreeably to this, a new name signifies a new quality or state, — a change of the former condition; as in Is. 62:2,

‘And thou shalt be called by a new name,

Which the mouth of Jehovah shall fix upon thee.’

Hence the custom of changing names upon any remarkable change of condition. So, on account of the new covenant made with God, Abraham and Sarah received those new names from God himself; so Jacob was named Israel; so Joseph had a new name given him by Pharaoh; and Daniel another by the king of Babylon. So our Savior changed Simon’s name for Peter; and the primitive Christians took a new name at their baptism.

To be called by the name of any one, signifies to belong to, to be the property of, or to be in subjection to, that person whose name is called upon the other, as in Ge. 48:16.

Thus, to be called by the name of God is to be accounted his servant, to be appropriated to Him, and separated from the heathen world, as in De. 28:10, 2 Chr. 7:14, Ac. 15:17.

So, because a woman by marriage becomes subject and the property of her husband, therefore, in Is. 4:1, she is said to have the name of her husband called upon her.

And thus, when God had submitted all creatures on earth to Adam, in token of their subjection, and to give him possession of the gift, God brought them to him to be named.

So David, to express that God is the Lord as well as Maker of the stars, says, Ps. 147:4, ‘He calleth the number of the stars; He calleth them all by their names.’

Thus masters gave names to their slaves; and these, that it might be publicly known to whom they belonged, were branded in their foreheads with the names of marks of their masters. See Potter’s Grecian Antiquity, vol. i. p. 163; Martial, Plautus, &c.

And, for the same reason, soldiers were branded in the hand with the name or character of their general. And, on the same account, it was customary to stigmatize the worshippers and votaries of some of the gods.

To call by name implies a superiority to examine and blame the actions of the persons called. The phrase is thus used in Ignatius’s Epistles, and in Virgil’s Aeneid, b. 12, v. 759.

Names of men are sometimes taken for the men themselves, as in Ac. 1:15, ‘the number of the names;’ i. e. the number of the men.

And thus in Virgil,—Sylvius, Albanum nomen, means, Sylvius, a man of Albania.

The origin of this expression is to be deduced from the public registers of the names of citizens, which were very carefully kept by the Greeks and Romans, and from the exact account of genealogies among the Jews; and from the diptychs or martyria used in the primitive church, in which were registered the names of all the faithful. Hence the expression, to blot out a man’s name, signifies to reject or cast him out from enjoying any longer the privileges of a citizen or Christian, by blotting his name out of the public register or martyria.

Am. 6:1, ‘which are named chief of the nations,’ &c.

The Hebrew word implies an allusion to the custom of marking a name or character by punctures. See Lowth on Is. 41:5. They call themselves, not after their religious ancestors, but after the chief of the idolatrous nations, with whom they intermarry contrary to their law.

Persons of name were ‘the known ones,’ or principal men, to whom the house of Israel came for justice, and to pay court. None but men of note seem to have been thus distinguished.

Man of name is a man of renown; so David is called on account of his victories, 2 S. 7:29, 1 S. 18:7, 2 S. 12:28. And the Roman generals used to take names from their victories, as Africanius, Asiaticus, Macedoniensis, and the like; and sometimes from things done at home for the public good, as Cicero was saluted Pater Patriæ, father of his country, and Augustus afterwards.

The word eshem, name, denotes simply an object of worship or invocation. Hence, eshem, the name, is the object of worship to Israel, Le. 24:11. And so in Ex. 20:25, when God says, ‘I record my name,’ the meaning is, I choose a place where I require to be worshipped, wherein I will show my glory and power, and hear the prayers of them that invoke Me.

Thus the declaration of God, in Ex. 3:15, when He first appeared to Moses, ‘This is my name forever, and it is my memorial to all generations,’ respects his worship. It is that name by which He is to be remembered, and distinguished from all false objects; for the word memorial is a term of the rituals, i.e. 2:2. Therefore, when God forbids Israel, in Ex. 23:13, even to make mention of the names of other gods, He forbids to worship them, or to commemorate any of their actions. For God calls Himself, Ex. 34:14, a jealous God; in the Septuagint, Ωλοντος οὐρανού, a jealous name, or object of worship. It was on this account that Moses inquired after the name of God, when He appeared to him, Ex. 3:13. And in Jud. 13:17, Manoah says to the angel, ‘What is thy name, that when thy sayings come to pass, we may do the like?’ an expression originating probably in this, that when God appeared by vision, dream, or miracle, to the patriarchs, they noted the place, and commemorated the event by some solemn acts of devotion, and the imposition of a name; as in Ge. 12:7, 8, 13:1-18, 28:18, 19. And so in regard to false deities; wherever they were supposed to have performed any thing memorable, or whenever they were understood to preside and to favor their votaries, there a monument was raised, and the name invoked with suitable solemnities. See an instance in Pap. statius, b. 4, v. 64.

Hence it comes, that not only among the Jewish authors, but also the Gentiles, name is the same as to invoke in divine worship.

And thus, to be baptized into the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, is to be baptized into their worship, as the one God.

NIGHT. The time for sleep. 1 Th. 5:7, ‘They that sleep, sleep in the night; whence sleep among the mythologists, is called the son of Night.’ Hippocrates, in his prognostics, says, ‘It is proper to be awake in the day, and to sleep in the night.’ And Virgil, A. n. 8, calls sleep dormus noctis opus, the gift of dark night. And Valer, Flaccus. Argon. b. 5,

‘Non hominis genus et dura misera labores,
Retulata fessis q[ui]a tanta silentia rebus.’

Homericus thus expresses it, Odyssey, b. 3, v. 334, ‘The lamp of day is quenched beneath the deep; And soft approach the balmy hours of sleep; Nor fits it to prolong the heavily fatal, Timeless, indolent, but retire to rest.’

The whole term of human life is frequently in Scripture called a day; see Jb. ch. 14, and other places. But in one passage it is called night; Ro. 13:12, ‘The night is far spent, (that is, the time of ignorance and profaneness,) the day is at hand.’ Or, as the same apostle says, Ep. 5:8, ‘Ye were once darkness; now are ye light in the Lord.’

Night, being the time of darkness, the image and shadow of death, in which the beasts of prey go forth to devour, symbolically signifies a time of adversity and affliction, in which men prey upon each other, and the stronger tyrannize over the weaker. Thus, Is. 21:12, ‘Watchman, what of the night?’ an inquiry how long their captivity was to last. Zeb. 14:6, 7,

‘And there shall be one day,
(it is known to Jehovah;)
It shall be neither day nor night,
But at eventide there shall be light.’

See Re. 21:23, and 22:5—meaning, that there shall be no vicissitude of day and night, but a constant light; and this signifies, symbolically, that there shall be no vicissitude of peace and war, but a constant state of quiet and happiness.

Daubuz quotes, from Herbelot, to show the notion of the Arabians: ‘In the Humajoun-namch it is said, he that has done justice in this night has built himself a house for the next day; — meaning, says Herbelot, by this night, the present life of this world, which is nothing but darkness; and by the next day, the future life, which is to be a clear day for good men.’

The night is plainly put for a time of ignorance and helplessness in Mt. 3:6:—

‘Wherefore there shall be night to you, so that ye shall have no vision;
And there shall be darkness to you, so that ye shall have no divination;
And the sun shall go down upon the prophets,
And the day shall be dark upon them.’

The paraphrase of Erasmus on 1 Th. 5:7, deserves to be noticed: ‘Dies metundis iis, &c.; i. e. the day of final judgment is to be dreaded by those who, blinded by their vices, lead a sort of nocturnal life; but ye, brethren, need not be afraid lest it should overtake you suddenly; for all you, who follow Christ, do not belong to the kingdom of darkness, but to the kingdom of light and of God. Henceforward, if we wish not to be overtaken, let us not sleep, as others do, who know not the light of Christ, but let us watch and be sober, always circumspect, that nothing may be admitted through inadvertence into the mind, which may offend either God or man, &c.

In Jn. 9:1, night is put for death. So Horace, b. 1, Ode 4, ‘ Jam te premet nos?’ — Soon will the night overtake my friend. And, Ode 28, line 15, ‘ Omnes una manet nos,’ — One night remains for all.

In 1. 15:1, the words ‘in the night’ are understood by Vitringa to mean suddenly, unexpectedly; but there is some doubt about the correctness of the present reading. See Lowth’s note.

O.

OAK. The symbol of men of high rank and power.

In Is. 2:13, ‘ the oaks of Bashan’ are used, in the way of metaphor, for kings, princes, and the like. See Zch. 11:2, where, under the image of trees, the fall of mighty men and the subversion of the Jewish polity are represented:

‘ Howl, O fir-tree, because the cedar is fallen,
Because the goodly ones are destroyed;
Howl, O ye oaks of Bashan,
Because the fenced wood is felled.’

In Am. 2:9, the Amorite is said to be ‘ strong as the oaks.’

The original Hebrew term for oak is derived, according to Celsius, from ail, robur, which is the Latin word for the oak, on account of its hardness and strength.

Oaks were the scene of idolatrous worship, and therefore are frequently mentioned as denoting such practices.

Jer. 2:31,

‘ I have not found it (the blood) in a digged hole,
But upon every oak.’

So Blayney renders it, in conformity to the Septuagint and the Syriac; and his note on the passage is — ‘ In the law it is commanded, Lv. 17:13, that the blood of animals killed in hunting should be covered with dust; in order, no doubt, to create a horror at the sight of blood. In allusion to this command, it is urged against Jerusalem, Ez. 24:7, that she had not only shed blood in the midst of her, but that “she had set it upon the top of a rock, and poured it not upon the ground, to cover it with dust;” that is, she had seemed to glory in the crime, by doing it in the most open and audacious manner, so as to challenge God’s vengeance. In like manner, it is said here, that God had not discovered the blood that was shed in holes under ground, but that it was sprinkled upon every oak, before which their inhuman sacrifices had been performed.’

The oak was not merely the scene of idolatrous worship, but sometimes the material of which the idol was made. Is. 14:14, ‘ He taketh the oak to make a god.’ Horace has something similarly severe:

‘ Olim truncus crassus, inutile lignum,
Cum faber, incutens scutum faceret Priapom,
Maluit esse Drom.’

Sacred groves were a very ancient and favorite appendage of idolatry. They were furnished with the temple of the god to whom they were dedicated, with altars, images, and every thing necessary for performing the various rites of worship offered there; and were the scenes of many impure ceremonies, and of much abominable superstition. See Ez. 8:28, and Ho. 1:13, where idolatrous worship and its accompaniments,

‘ Under the oak, and the poplar, and the ilex,’ are severely reprehended.

OIL. The use of oil, in the anointing of a person, signifies the designation or inauguration of that person to some high office or dignity.

Ps. 15:7, ‘ God hath anointed thee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows.’ See II. 1:9.

It is applied to the Jewish kings. I S. 10:1, ‘ Then Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it on Saul’s head, and kissed him.’ 2 S. 1:21; see also I S. 16:13, 1 K. 1:39; 2 K. 9:6.

It is applied to the Messiah, Is. 61:1; compared with Lu. 4:18, and Ac. 4:27, and 10:38.

It is applied to Cyrus, Is. 45:1.

It is applied to Aaron the priest, Le. 8:12; and to the prophets, 1 K. 19:16.

The anointing, in 1 Jn. 2:27, is the spirit of illumination, furnishing with gifts and graces.

This consecration with oil not only served as a form of admission to important functions, but was considered as adding a sacredness to their persons, and sometimes served as a guard against violence, in consequence of the respect attached to it. ‘ God forbid,’ says David, ‘ that I should stretch forth my hand against Saul, since he is the anointed of Jehovah.’ 1 S. 24:6.

Sometimes mere designation, without unction, is implied in it, as in the case of Cyrus, Is. 45:1, who was selected by God to restore Judah, and for the rebuilding of the temple of Jerusalem.

Sometimes it is used of the patriarchs Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as in Ps. 105:15, ‘ Touch not mine anointed ones,’ for the word is in the plural number; not as literally anointed, but as specially favored of God, and set apart to be the heads or progenitors of a great nation.

It is more eminently used as applicable to the Mediator of the new covenant, by David, Ps. 22, who represents Him as King of Zion; by Isaiah, 61:1, as the proclaimer of great and good tidings; by Daniel, 9:25, as making expiation for the sins of the people.

And this was the substance of apostolic preaching; e. g. Ac. 17:18, ‘ This Jesus whom I preach to you is the Anointed One.’ Ac. 18:5, ‘ Paul testified to the Jews, that Jesus was the Anointed One.’ Ac. 18:28, ‘ showing by the Scriptures that Jesus was the Anointed One.’

The oil of gladness, Ps. 45:7, denotes theunction of the Holy Spirit, anciently typified by oil, by which unction Jesus was appointed to the offices of Prophet, Priest, and King.

In Zch. 4:14, Joshua the high-priest, and Zerubbabel are styled sons of oil, as being anointed with the Holy Spirit, and made his instruments in reestablishing the church and state of the Jews. Compare verses 6 and 12.

Christians, as followers of the Messiah, and called by his name, may be considered as anointed ones, consecrated to his service. Would they were all such!

Oil is also the symbol of abundance, fertility, joy, &c. See Ps. 23:5; 92:11; 141:5; Song 13, 15, 61:3.

It is so considered, on account of its fragrance and salutary qualities. The latter are more particularly recognized in the New Testament, by the apostle James, 5:14, where he enjoins that the sick should be anointed with oil, in the name of the Lord, as an accompaniment of prayer, for their recovery. See also Mk. 6:13. This ceremony — for it cannot be called an in-titration — was continued for some length of time in the primitive church; but it seems to have ceased when the miraculous gifts of healing were withdrawn. See the case of Proculus, mentioned by Tertullian in his address to Scapula, who is said to have cured the emperor Severus of a certain distemper by the use of oil; for which service that emperor was favorable afterwards to the Christians, and kept Proculus as long as he lived in his palace. Jerome and Chrysostom also mention cures of this kind; but how far they are to be esteemed miraculous must be left to every one’s judgment.

OLIVE-TREE, on account of its verdure, soundness, and the usefulness of the oil it produces, is the symbol of prosperity, plenty, and enjoyment.

Thus the Psalmist, Ps. 128:3, describing the happiness of a man blessed of God, says, ‘ Thy children shall be like the olive-branches round about thy table.’

It is also the symbol of peace and abated anger. Thus Noah’s dove, Ge. 8:11, had, on her return to the ark, an olive-leaf in her mouth.

In enumerating the sources of aliment and wealth, the prophet Habakkuk, 3:17, includes this among them, ‘ though the labor of the olive should fail.’

David compares himself to a green olive-tree in the house of God. Ps. 52:8. Hosea uses similar language respecting Israel, 14:6, ‘ his beauty shall be as the olive-tree’ — a simile employed also by Paul, in advertising to their state before their rejection, where he speaks of ‘ the root and fatness of the olive-tree.’ Ro. 11:17, 24.

In Zch. 4:3, 11, 14, the two olive-trees on either side of the lamp-sconces, pouring oil into the lamps, are there explained to be the two anointed ones; Zerubbabel as captain of the people, and Joshua as high-priest. And this signified that these two maintained the nation of the captive Jews, both as to their ecclesiastical and civil state; as the olive-trees which afford oil maintain the light in the lamps, the symbols of government.

Reference seems to be made to this in Re. 11:4, where the two witnesses are described as the ‘ two olive-trees, and the two candlesticks, standing before the God of the earth;’ i. e. the faithful in every age, who refuse to comply with the general corruption, shall be constantly supported by divine aid, as if a lamp were kept always burning, by a continual supply of oil from a living olive-tree, constantly feeding it with the aliment of its flame, that it may never go out in darkness.

The olive became the emblem of peace to various and distant nations. See Virgil, Aen. 7, 1, 151; 8, 116; 11, 101. Levy, b. 39, c. 16; and 14, c. 25; and Statius, Theb. b. 12.

OX. The ox appears as one of the cherubic emblems in Ezekiel’s vision, 1:10; and the same seems to have been copied in a perverted way in the idolatrous images of the heathen, &c. g.

Moloch had the head of a calf or steer.

Apis or Serapis was represented in the form of a bull.

Mnevis, who was kept at Memphis, was figured in the same form.

Baal, or the sun, was worshipped under the form of an animal of the ox or beeve kind. We read of the heifer Baal in Tobit 15.

The Gauls worshipped a brazen bull.

Juggernaut’s temple in the East Indies has, in the middle of it, an ox cut in one entire stone larger than the life.

In Ac. 14:13, we find the priest of Jupiter bringing oxen for sacrifice.

In I Co. 9:9, the question, ‘ Doth God take care for oxen?’ leads the mind to the consideration of that higher sense the apostle has in view, namely, the maintenance of the Christian ministry; and is a proof, amongst others, that many injunctions under the law were emblematical of gospel institutions.

The ox has always been the symbol of agriculture, as Suidas terms it, who relates that the Egyptian Apis was a certain wealthy person, who, during a famine at Alexandria, relieved the people; at whose death they erected a temple to his memory, in which an ox was nourished, as the hieroglyphic of husbandry. And Abarbanel says, ‘ Therefore Jerobeam chose the appearance of an ox from the chariot of the cherubim, because it is the sign of abundance of corn and blessing of the nations.’ And so is represented in Greek coins, an ox with an ear of corn, or a plough, to denote the fertility of the country. And the daughter of Zion is compared by Micah, 4:12, 13, to this animal, in a beautiful allegory.

See under Calf.

P.

PALM. Branches of palm-trees are the symbol of joy after a victory, attended with antecedent sufferings.

By the Mosical law, Le. 23:40, they were used as a token of joy at the feast of tabernacles.

And they were used on any solemn occasion of joy, as after a victory or deliverance. 1 Mac. 13:51. Jn. 12:13.

With Philo, the palm is the symbol of victory. Alleg. b. 2, p. 50. And Plutarch, Symp. b. 8, c. 4, gives the same signification, assigning the reason of it, from the natural property of the palm-tree to rise up against pressure. Hence palma for victory, of which numerous examples might be given from Horace, Cicero, Plautus, Ovid, Terence, and others.

And hence the tegum of a triumphing emperor was called palmata, as having branches of palms painted thereon. Martial, b. 7, Ep. 3. Servius ad Aen. b. 2.

Ps. 92:12, ‘ The righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree.’ Cardan observes, that the palm-tree continues long in its youthful state; so that he who plants one will scarcely live to see the fruit of it.

Re. 7:9, ‘ Palms in their hands.’

‘ Quid per palmas nisi præmia victoria desinatur?’ &c.; i. e. what is meant by palms here, but the rewards of victory? For these are wont to be given only to conquerors. Hence also it is written of those, who in the contest of martyrdom have overcome the ancient enemy, and now rejoice as victors in their native region, that they have palms in their hands. Gregor. Magn. in Ezek. b. 2, p. 17.

It is easy to see what the multitude had in view when they carried palm-branches before the Savior. Jn. 12:13. Their actions and words corresponded — ‘ Hosanna, (i. e. save us,) blessed is the King of Israel that cometh in the name of the Lord.’

The ancients always speak of it as a stately and noble tree. It was esteemed an emblem of honor, and made use of as a reward of victory. ‘ Plurimum palmarum homo’ was a proverbial expression among the Romans for a soldier of merit. Pliny speaks of the various species of palms, and of the great repute in which they were held by the Babylonians. He says, that the noblest of them were styled the royal palms, and supposes that they were so called from their being set apart for the king’s use. But they were very early an emblem of royalty, and it is a circumstance included in their original name, palma. We find from Apuleius, that Mercur, the Hermes of Egypt, was represented with a palm-branch

In his hand, and his priests at Herinopolis used to have them stuck in their sandals, on the outside. The goddess Isis was thus represented, and we may infer that Hermes had the like ornaments, which the Greeks mistook for feathers, and have, in consequence of it, added wings to his feet. The Jews used to carry boughs of the same tree at some of their festivals, and particularly at the celebration of their nuptials. In how great estimation this tree was held of old, we may learn from many passages in the sacred writings. Solomon says to his espoused, 'How fair and how pleasant art thou, O love, for delights! Thy stature is like a palm-tree.' And the Psalmist, for an encouragement to holiness, says, that 'the righteous shall flourish like the palm-tree,' Ps. 93:12; for the palm was supposed to rise under a weight, and to thrive in proportion to its being depressed.

The ancients had an opinion that the palm was immortal; at least, if it did die, it recovered again, and obtained a second life by renewal. Hence the story of the bird styled the Phœnix is thought to have been borrowed from this tree. We find it to have been an emblem of immortality among all nations, sacred and profane. The blessed in heaven are represented, in the Apocalypse, by John, 'as standing before the throne in white robes, with branches of palm in their hands.' The notion of this plant being an emblem of royalty prevailed so far, that when our Savior made his last entrance into Jerusalem, the people took branches of palm-trees, and acclaimed Him as a prince, crying, 'Hosanna, blessed is the King of Israel.' Jn. 12:13.

The branch of a palm-tree was called bai in Egypt, and it had the same name in other places. Bai, baia, from which our English bay, are used for palm-branches by John, in the passage just quoted.

Judea was denoted by a palm-tree, because that country abounded particularly in palms, and because the Jews used the leaves in their sacred rites, and they had a solemnity called by that name; whence on Roman coins we see a palm-tree and a female sitting sad under it, with this inscription, Judea capta.

PAPS are explained by the oneirocritics to signify sons and daughters; and the symbol is very adequate, the breasts being designed for the nurture of children.

Hence Job, 21:24, to express that a man has great substance to uphold his family, says, 'His breasts are full of milk.' But the original term here is supposed by some to mean bowels or intestines, rather than breasts. See Parkhurst on Other, and Durell on the passage.

In Ho. 9:14, a miscarrying womb, and dry breasts, signify loss or want of children.

PARADISE. Lu. 23:43. 2 Co. 12:4. Re. 2:7. Paradise signifies a garden, park, or enclosure, full of valuable trees, fruits, and herbs; in short, a garden of pleasure, such as that in which our first parents were placed in a state of innocence, called by the Hebrew name of Oden, or Eden, i. e. pleasure.

Hence it is the symbol of joy, happiness, delight. The original term parēdes occurs in Ne. 2:2, where it is called 'the king's forest,' or paradise of trees; in Ec. 2:5, 'I made me gardens'; i. e. paradises; and Song 4:13, 'Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates.'

It is supposed to be derived from perēd, to separate, and the Arabic dar, to hide, as denoting a secret enclosure, or separate covert. The word is applied in this sense by Herodotus, Xenophon, and Diodorus Siculus. There is a passage in Xenophon's Economies, where Socrates says, that 'the king of Persia, wherever he is, takes particular care to have gardens or enclosures, which are called paradeses, full of every thing beautiful and good that the earth can produce.'

Such were the κρήπαι κοσματοι, or pebble gardens of the Persians, which Diodorus Siculus mentions, which were situated near the royal palace. Such also were the gardens of Lucullus, of which Plutarch speaks; and the gardens of Sallust, which Aurelian loved to dwell in. See Vopiscus.

Julius Pollux, Onomasticon, b. 9, c. 12, observes, 'Paradise seems to be a barbaric name; but, like many other Persian words, it came by use to be admitted into the Greek language.'

From the pleasantness of such a place, parade is in general the symbol of any pleasant or happy state; as in Ez. 28:13, 'Thou hast been in Eden, the garden of God.'

Ezekiel here, in his prophecy against Tyre, whose merchants traded to all parts of the earth, observes, that they had been at the garden of God, and that they brought thence precious stones, &c. Whence it may be conjectured, that the site of paradise was near Babylon, between Korna and Bassora, and amongst the domains of the Assyrian empire, Shuckford, vol. iv. p. 125, &c.

With Philo, paradise is the symbol of virtue, conferring peace, ease, and joy. And, according to the Indian, c. 8, the fruits of paradise are divine and useful notions.

In the New Testament, the term is used to denote the mansion of good souls in their state of separation, or the state of the faithful between death and the resurrection. It is curious that the Jews employ the terms paradise, and garden of Eden, to the intermediate state of holy departed souls. See Grotius and Wetstein on Lu. 23:43. Hence, when applied to a future state, it must denote a place wholly devoted to the worship and service of God, and abounding with every thing that can constitute the felicity of an immortal spirit.

To denote the same state, the Jews sometimes used the phrase 'Abraham's bosom,' a metaphor borrowed from the manner in which they reclined at meals. Lu. 16:22.

There is a distinction, therefore, to be made between paradise and heaven, or the seat of the glorious hierarchy. The enjoyment of paradise is confined to the intermediate state; that of heaven is necessarily deferred till the creation of the new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. See Campbell's Prel. Diss. 6, p. 2.

Origen's note on 2 Co. 12:4, is good: 'If Paul,' says he, 'saw such unutterable things, even though afterwards to descend from the third heaven, how many more, and how much greater shall we know, when, having followed Jesus and taken up his cross, we shall be admitted into the blessed state above, nevermore to quit it!' Exhort. ad Martyr. p. 175.

PEARLS. Re. 21:21. 'And the twelve gates were twelve pearls.'

The reference seems to be to Is. 54:11,12, and one would repeat here what Lowth has said there, as being equally applicable:—'These seem to be general images to express beauty, magnificence, purity, strength, and solidity, agreeably to the ideas of the Eastern nations; and to have never been intended to be strictly scrutinized, or minutely and particularly explained, as if they had each of them some precise, moral, or spiritual meaning.'

Tobit, in his prophecy of the final restoration of Israel, describes the New Jerusalem in the same Oriental manner: 'For Jerusalem shall be built up with sapphires, and emeralds, and precious stones; thy walls, and towers, and battlements, with pure gold. And the streets of Jerusalem shall be paved with beryl, and carbuncle, and stones of Ophir.' Tobit 13: 16,17.

PILLAR is the support and ornament of a building, and symbolically signifies the chief prop of a family, city, or state.

Pau uses the symbol, Ga. 2:9, in speaking of the apostles James, Cephas, and John: as pillars are the supports of a building, so the three apostles here mentioned were esteemed as pillars in the church; i. e. persons of the greatest authority and eminence—James, as the brother of our Lord, Peter or Cephas, on account of his confession, on which the church of Christ was to be built, and John, as the beloved disciple of our Lord. It is probable, also, that the churches of Judea and Jerusalem were peculiarly under the inspection of these three apostles.

In Euripides, the pillars of families are the male children. Iphig. Taur.

In the oneirocritics, pillars signify the princes or nobles in a kingdom.

Pillar of iron, the symbol of great firmness and duration; and as such, used in the prophet Jeremiah, 1:18.

Pillars burning with a clear fire, without being destroyed, signify, according to Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 10, that the children of the dreamer shall grow better and more illustrious.

For fire implies persecution and torment; and as fire trieth gold, so does adversity the good and valiant.

This interpretation of pillars burning with fire without being consumed, greatly illustrates the symbol of the bush burning with fire, and remaining unconsumed, in Ex. 3:2. For this at once set forth the miraculous preservation of the Israelites in the Egyptian fiery furnace, or their state of oppression there, and their wonderful deliverance from thence.

Pillar of salt, Ge. 19:26, an encrusted column, a perpetual monument of the divine anger; for salt means perpetuity.

POMEGRANATE, an exceedingly beautiful fruit, resembling an apple, the form of which was borrowed as an ornament to the high priest's ephod. Ex. 28:33,34, on which Drexelius remarks, that 'they were symbolical of the reward annexed to virtue; and were placed, not at the top, or in the middle, but at the bottom of the garment; as it is not the beginning of the progress, but the persevering close of a virtuous life, that obtains the crown.'

Song 4:3, 'Thy cheeks are like a piece of pomegranate about the locks?' The cheeks are compared to a piece of this fruit, because the pomegranate, when whole, is of a dull color; but, when cut up, of a lively, beautiful vermilion. Modesty and ignorance are called by this name in Arabic. See Durell in loc.

Ez. 10:10,

'Thy mother was like a pomegranate
Planted by the waters.'

Ray, in his Hist. Plant. p. 1362, fol., says of the pomegranate,

'Umbra amara autem et rigorosa.'

Song 8:1, 'Wine of my pomegranates'; i. e. either wine acidulated with the juice of pomegranates, which the Turks use, or wine made of the juice, such as Sir John Chardin mentions.

Parkhurst, whose bias, though an amiable man, is always towards Hutchinsonian interpretations, thinks the bruzen pomegranates which Solomon placed in the network over the crowns which were on the top of the two brazen pillars, were meant to represent the fixed stars strongly reflecting light on the earth and planets.

The Syrian idol, Rimon, has his name from the same Hebrew term. Achilles Tatius mentions an ancient temple at Pelusium, in Egypt, in which was a statue of the deity, styled Zeus (or Jupiter), Casius, holding this mysterious fruit, the pomegranate, in his hand.

PORTRAITS. It is impossible to read the description given by Ezekiel, 23:14,15, of the images of the Chaldeans portrayed with vermilion, &c., without being reminded of similar appearances found in the caverns of the Thebanis, of Elephantis, and Elora, as detailed by travellers. See Maurice's Indian Antq. vol. ii. passim.

POSTURE. The posture of persons acting, determines, in some measure, the nature or kind of their actions.

Standing signifies resisting, defending, struggling, and contending for victory,—giving assistance to friends and the like; as, in Ac. 7:55, Christ is said to be standing, when He appeared to Stephen, as ready to assist him in his agony.

To stand before another, is a posture of service. De. 10:8. 1 K. 10:8. 1 S. 16:22. 2 Ch. 18:18. Lu. 1:19.

Walking among, or in the midst, is a posture of dignity and authority,—of one that is busy, and watching and defending those whom he walks about or amongst.

Thus God, to represent Himself as protecting and governing the Israelites, says, in Le. 26:12, that 'He would walk amongst them.' And the protecting angel, in Da. 4:13,23, is called a watchman or patroller, one that goes about to defend from any surprise. And so Homer, in his Iliad, b. 1, v. 37, has used the symbol in relation to Apollo, of whom he says, ὅς προνύμιον, κ. τ. λ.; where the scholiast explains ἀρβίσεις βραχίους. For indeed ἄρβιστος is but synonymous to it.

Sitting signifies ruling, reigning, judging, and enjoying peace.

Thus, in Jud. 5:10, 'Ye that sit in judgment,' are the magistrates or judges. In 2 S. 19:8, 'The king sitteth in the gate,' i. e. he is ready to execute any duty of a king.

And to sit on the throne is always synonymous to reigning, in the Scripture; and is so used by Virgil in his Aeneid, b. 7, v. 169; a seat on throne being the symbol of government.

Sitting, with other adjuncts, has a different signification. As, to sit upon the earth, or on a dunghill, signifies to be in extreme misery.

To sit in darkness, is to be in prison and slavery.

To sit as a widow, is to mourn as a widow.

To fall down or prostrate before another, is the symbol of submission and homage. See Ge. 37:7,8. 27:29. Is. 45:14.

PRINCE. This title, as is well known, is applied to Jesus Christ, in various forms.

He is the Prince of peace, Is. 9:6; the Prince of life, Ac. 3:15; the Prince of the kings of the earth, Re. 1:5; the Prince of princes, Da. 8:25; the Prince of the host, Da. 8:11.

The title is once given to Satan, as prince of this world. Jn. 12:31. Comp. Mat. 4:9.

But there is a peculiar sense in which the term is used by Daniel. Thus, 10:13, prince of the kingdom of Persia; 10:21, Michael your prince; 10:20, the prince of Gravie.

In these passages, the term probably means a tutelary angel? The doctrine of tutelary angels of different countries seems to be countenanced in several passages, and especially by Zeb. 6:5. See also Zech. 3:1; and Ju. verse 9; and Re. 12:7.

Michael and Gabriel were probably the tutelary angels of the Jews, and would be their only protectors in the various contests for empire till the coming of Christ.

That there are principalities in the heavenly hierarchy, seems plain from several places in the New Testament; e. g. Ro. 8:38. Ep. 1:21. 3:10. Col. 1:16. 2:10. Ju. verse 6. That there are such among the apostate angels, appears from Ep. 6:12. Col. 2:15.

The names Michael and Gabriel do not occur in any books of the Old Testament that were written before the captivity; and it is suggested by some that they were borrowed from the Chaldeans, with whom and the Persians, the doctrine of the general administration and superintendence of angels over empires and provinces was commonly received.

We know, and can know, no more of the offices of these celestial agents, than what is revealed to us; and therefore it is in vain to indulge conjecture. In general, as Wintle well observes, we may conclude, that they will be favorable or unfavorable to any nation or people, according to their deserts; and that all things, and all powers, will work together for good to those that fear and love God.

PROMISE consists, not only in predicting future events by divine inspiration, but also in a public study and zeal for God's laws; the office of the ancient prophets being not only to reveal future events, (which power was rather given them to establish their commission,) but also to preach and maintain the law of God, already established, when the Israelites forsook it, and to be zealous for it even unto death; to the end that their zeal and constancy might be a witness and testimony against their persecutors, of the truth of God's law.

The primitive notion also of a prophet, is to be a spokesman, or interpreter, or declarer of the mind of God to man, as appears by comparing Ex. 7:1, with Ex. 4:16. See also Virgil's Aeneid, b. 10, v. 175.

So that to prophesy is to bear witness or testimony to the truth against errors and corruptions. And hence to prophesy and to witness are used as near akin in several places of Scripture.

Thus, when our Savior was going to prophesy that one of his disciples should betray him, the word used is épauprophetei. He testified, instead of He prophesied, Jn. 13:21.

So, in Jn. 1:7, 'to witness concerning the light,' signifies to preach the gospel,—to be the great prophet and forerunner of the Messiah. So, in Ac. 1:8, and 22:15, the apostles and Paul are said to be witnesses, because they were preachers or prophets; and, in Ac. 20:23, the Holy Spirit is said to witness, épapapréptai. See likewise 1 Pe. 1:11.

And thus our Savior 'came into the world to bear witness to the truth'; i. e. to declare the will of God to men, as that great Prophet, De. 18:15,19, whom whosoever would not hear, should be cut off from his people.

Pr. 30:1, and 31:1, the prophecy which his mother taught him; rather the charge or lesson which king Lemuel's mother taught him. Nesha, masha, is frequently used by the prophets to signify what they were charged with, and thence called a burden.

Re. 11:6. 'These have power to shut heaven, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy,' &c.

An allusion to what Elijah and Moses did; meaning, that the witnesses should have similar power given them to smite the earth with plagues; at least, what they denounce against the enemies of truth, God will accomplish. The witnesses here are not single persons, but a perpetual collective body of men, or a succession of witnesses against the errors and false worship introduced into the church.

R.

RAİN is the symbol of divine benignity, vouchsafed as the reward of human obedience. Thus:

Ho. 10:12,

'Sow to yourselves in righteousness,
Reap in the fruit of loving-kindness,
Break up to yourselves the fallow-ground of knowledge,
That ye may seek Jehovah,
Till he come and reign righteousness upon you.'

Ho. 6:3,

'His going forth is prepared as the morning,
And he shall come to us as the rain,
As the latter rain which watereth the earth;'

i. e. He shall come as our deliverer, as surely as the morning returns after the night, or the latter rain comes in its season.

Rain is used as the symbol of discourse and instruction.

De. 32:2,

'My doctrine shall drop as the rain.'

Jb. 29:22,23,

'After my words they speak not again,
And my speech dropped upon them;
And they waited for me as for the rain,
And they opened their mouth wide as for the latter rain.'

See also Is. 55:10-13, where the same is beautifully expressed, and the effects described under highly poetical images. The wilderness turned into a paradise, Lebanon into Carmel, the desert of the Gentiles watered with the heavenly snow and rain, so that (as the Chaldean gives the moral sense of the emblem) 'instead of the wicked shall arise the just, and instead of sinners, such as fear to sin.'

The divine influences are compared to rain in Is. 44:3,4—

'For I will pour out waters on the thirsty,
And flowing streams on the dry ground;
I will pour out my Spirit upon thy seed,
And my blessing on thine offspring;
And they shall spring up as grass among the waters,
As the willows beside the aqueducts.'

Zch. 10:1, and 14:17, are in like manner understood by Vitringa to mean 'spiritual' rain. And he remarks on the latter place, 'If the Egyptians do not come up to the feast of tabernacles, there shall be no rain upon them;' these words appear a paradox, since there is no rain in Egypt at any time, as is well known; though modern travellers do testify that rain occasionally falls. But the sense of the place is, there shall be nothing analogous to rain, i. e. no overflowing of the Nile, to produce the usual fecundity. But the difficulty might be obviated, by supposing that the prophet meant that no rains would fall in Ethiopia, so as to produce the inundation of the Nile in Egypt.

Granger says, in Lower Egypt it rains much and often; in Middle, seldom; in Upper, not at all.

Am. 7:6, to drop the word, is to prophesy,—the metaphor being taken from the symbol of rain or dew. See Ez. 20:46, and 21:2; also Mi. 2:6,11.

In 2 Pe. 2:17, false teachers are called 'wells without water.'

In Ps. 72:6, the blessings of Christ's coming are described as rain. And Homer, II. ψ. v. 597, compares the exultation of joy in a man's mind to the morning dew reviving the corn.

Agreeably to this, the oneirocritics explain the symbol of rain or dew, of all manner of good things. They say, a fine, gentle, sunshiny rain is the symbol of a general good; according to which, the Psalmist says, 'Thou, O God, sentest a gracious rain upon thine inheritance, to refresh it when it was weary,' Ps. 68:9. Hence, among the Egyptians, the prophet carried in his hand, as a symbol of his office, in solemn processions, a pitcher, as being the disposer of learning, which is as water, rain, or dew to the soul.

An tempestuous shower may be the symbol of war. Thus Pindar compares war to a shower, Isch. Od. 6. And Hannibal compares Fabius Maximus, hovering on the hills to avoid a battle, and afterwards coming down to snatch the victory out of his hands, to a cloud on the top of a hill, breaking out afterwards into a shower, with storms and flashes. Plutarch on Fabius.

RAIBOW. The rainbow was instituted by God Himself, as the symbol or sign of his covenant with mankind after the flood, whereon He had destroyed the whole human race, except one family.

By the rainbow, as a symbol or token of the covenant, He promised not to destroy the earth any more by the waters of the flood, and that upon the sight of it, He would be mindful of his promise. Ge. 9:13-17.

So that, whilst this world lasts, it will be a token of God's reconciliation with mankind; and consequently that He will not bring them wholly under his anger to destroy them.

So that, in general, it is a symbol of God's willingness to receive men into favor again.

The common bow is a symbol of war and victory. But the rainbow has two notable properties, which make it fit to be a symbol of peace. For,

1st. Its rundle, or part which should look towards the object aimed at, is always turned from the earth, thereby showing, that it aims not at men, as we know that the pointing of the sword downwards, is a token of submission or surrender.

2d. It has no string, which shows that the master will not shoot; so that a bow unbent, or without a string, is a proper symbol of peace and friend ship.

Hence the rainbow, however it appears, is, according to Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 39, always accounted good to them that are in great poverty, or other ill circumstances.

And all this is suitable to the natural properties of the rainbow, for it never appears but when there is a gentle rain with the sun shining, which kind of rain is never known to do any harm, but much good. See Baaluz, from whom these particulars are borrowed.

When the Jews behold the rainbow, they bless God, who remembers his covenant, and is faithful to his promises. And the tradition of this its designation to proclaim comfort to mankind, was strong among the heathen; for, according to the mythology of the Greeks, the rainbow was the daughter of Wonder, 'a sign to mortal men,' as Homer calls it, Il. 11, l. 27, 28.

'Reflected various light, and arching bowed,
Like colored rainbows o'er a shivery cloud,
Jove's wondrous bow, of three celestial dyes,
Placed as a sign to man amid the skies.'

Iris, or the rainbow, in Hebrew keshet, was regarded as a goddess, and upon its appearance, was viewed as the messenger of the celestial deities; and that not only by the Greeks and Romans, but also by the inhabitants of Peru in South America, when the Spaniards came thither. The Abbe Lambert tells us, 'The Peruvians paid great honors to the rainbow, as well for the beauty of its colors, as because they proceeded from the sun, and it was for this reason the incas, or sovereigns of Peru, took it for their device.'

Plutarch says, 'The Greeks made Iris the daughter of Thaumas, or Wunder, because men admired or wondered at her.' So Cotta, the Academician in Cicero de Nat. Deor. b. 3, 20, quoted by Parkhurst, says, 'For this reason the rainbow is said to be sprung from Thaumas, because it has an admirable form.'

According to Homer, II. 17, v. 547, the purple rainbow is spread out from heaven to mortal eye by Jove —

'As when bright Jove, denouncing future woe,
O'er the dark clouds extends his purple bow,
(In sign of tempests from the treacherous air,
Or from the rage of man, destructive war),
The drooping eagle dread the impending skies,
And from his half-folded field the blarer bees.'

An apocryphal writer has thus beautifully described it, Ecclis. (33:12)

'Look upon the rainbow, and praise Him who made it:
Very beautiful it is in the brightness thereof;
It compasseth the heaven about with a glorious circle,
And the hands of the Most High have bounded it.'

There is a reference to the rainbow, though not named, in Is. 54:9,10.

Ex. 1:28, 'As the appearance of the bow which is in the cloud in the day of rain, so was the appearance of the brightness round about.'

Re. 4:3, 'There was a rainbow round about the throne, in appearance like an emerald.'

Ex. 10:1, 'And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven clothed with a cloud, and a rainbow was upon his head.'

These three passages correspond with, and reflect upon, each other. The rainbow in all of them is the designed token of God's covenant and mercy, and of his faithful remembrance of his promise.

RAM. In the symbolical language any horned beast may signify a king or monarch, because of the horns which denote power.

So a ram is the symbol of a plain monarch or prince; but other horned beasts are to be explained with some adjuncts; as a goat signifies, according to the interpreters, a foothardy, fighting prince. And so Daniel is represented in Daniel's vision, as a ram; whilst Alexander, the most furious and rash of all warriors, is figured by a goat.

So wild beasts, Oryx, with horns, signify tyrants. In several parts of Scripture the word ram, which signifies a ram, is taken for a prince, as in the Song of Moses, in Ex. 15:15, the rams, or mighty men of Moab, is, in the Septuagint, the princes of the Moabites. And this is plainly from the metaphor; for the prince is the ram of the flock or people. See Ps. 60:1; 78:71,72.

RAZOR. Is. 7:20, 'Jehovah shall shave by the hired razor.'

To shave with the hired razor the head, the feet, and the beard, is an expression highly parabolical, to denote the utter devastation of the country from one end to the other, and the plundering of the people from the highest to the lowest, by the Assyrians, whom God employed as his instrument to punish the Jews. See Lowth's note on the place, and Ez. 5:1.

See under HAIR.

REED. The emblem of fragility and insecurity.

Egypt is compared to the staff of a broken reed. Is. 36:6.

Ezekiel has the same image, 29:7 —

'All the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am Jehovah, Because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.'

When they took hold of thee with thine hand, Thou wast crushed, and didst bear all their shoulder; When they leaned on thee, thou wast broken, And didst strain all their ions.'

It also denotes inconstancy and fickleness, as being easily moved by the air. Mat. 11:7.

Afflicted and contrite persons are compared to a bruised reed. Is. 42:3. Such persons the Savior would rather heal than discourage.

The reed was in ancient times used as a pen. 3 Jn. 13. It was used by fishermen as a rod; it was also employed as an instrument to measure with. It was about ten feet long, strong, and light. In Re. 11:9, there is mention made of such, and the representation seems to be taken from Ezekiel's vision, ch. 40, in which he beheld a person with a measuring rod, taking the dimensions of the buildings of a temple, showing the prophet, in vision, the model or plan of a new temple, to encourage the Jews to faithfulness in their religion, with the hopes of seeing the temple and true worship of God restored again.

There are two things, says Daubuz, mentioned in holy writ, whereby men may measure—a line and a reed.

The line, §25, habet, implies constantly a division and giving of possession into new lands; because it is the instrument by which the lands of conquered nations are divided, as in 2 S. 8; 2. 1a. 28. Am. 7:17. Is. 34:11-17.

In 2 S. 8:2, it is said ‘he measured them by line’; i. e., he divided the country of the Moabites into several parts, that he might the better know what towns it was most proper to demolish, and to extirpate the inhabitants of them. He used two lines—a line to put to death, and the fulness of a line to keep alive. The fulness of a line seems to denote a very large tract of country. See Chandler's Life of David, quoted by Parkhurst under §25.

The line implies also the division of a land into new lots, supposing a late conquest, and its being divided, to be inherited by new masters. Na. 3:10.

But the reed, as it is also used about lands, so it is chiefly employed about buildings. In Zeh. 21:5, a line is used to measure the whole city. In Ezekiel, the reed is employed to measure the temple.

Profan authors have similar expressions, which show that a measuring reed or line is to take possession of the things measured. And hence from §25, a cane or reed, comes reperke, to acquire or possess.

This use of a line or reed explains the Kavow, or rule, upon which Paul argues, 2 Co. 10:13, 16; the said rule signifying those churches to which he had the sole right by first occupation. ‘But we will not boast of things without our measure, but according to the measure of the rule which God hath distributed to us, a measure to reach even unto you,’ verse 16; and not to boast in another man's line of things made ready to our hand. See the whole passage.

A golden reed for measuring denotes that which is measured by it shall be glorious and permanent.

BEND. To rend the garments was, in Eastern countries and among ancient nations, a symbolical action, expressive of sorrow, fear, or contrition.

Many instances may be seen in the sacred writings, viz. Jud. 11:35. Est. 4:1. Ge. 41:13. Mat. 26:56. Ezr. 9:5. Jb. 1:20. Jer. 36:24. 2 Ch. 34:27.

See also Virgil, Aen. 12,

‘It schas veste Latium,
Conjuga attonitus fata, turbisque ruina.’

Thus Seneca in his Octavia, v. 328,

‘Scindit vestes Anxusta sua,
Laceratque conas.’

Jo. 2:13, ‘Rend your hearts, and not your garments,’ in allusion to this custom. But the phrase here is a Hebrewism, meaning, rend your hearts rather than your garments; or, rend your hearts, and not your garments only. For the prophet does not forbid the external appearances of mortification; but he cautions them against a merely hypocritical show of sorrow, and exhorts them to cherish that broken and contrite spirit, which is acceptable in the sight of God. So, in D. 10:16, ‘Circumcise the foreskin of your heart.’ And Ho. 6:10, ‘I desired mercy, and not sacrifice;’ i. e., I love the exercise of mercy rather than sacrifice, as the very next words plainly show, ‘and the knowledge of God more than burnt-offerings.’ A somewhat similar form of expression we have in Ro. 10:7, ‘God so thanked that ye were the servants of sin;’ &c.; i. e., God is praised, that though ye once were the servants of sin, yet now ye have obeyed, &c.

Rending the garments was sometimes expressive of different passions. Thus in Dion Cassius, the consul Paulus rends his garment through indignation. Caesar does the same when about to appear the multitude. Numbers also, in heathen history, upon the loss of their friends. Augustus rends his garment at the proposal of the dictatorship; and he is said to have done the same on hearing of the defeat of Varus.

REST, like sleep, is sometimes used as the symbol of death. Thus:

Re. 14:13;

‘They are the dead who die in the Lord,
Thus they may rest from their labors’

Ps. 57:2;

‘He shall go in peace, he shall rest in his bed,
Even the percherman, he that walketh in the straight path.’

SYMBOL DICT.

Jb. 3:13,

‘For now should I have lain still and been quiet;
I should have slept; then had I been at rest;
With kings and counsellors of the earth;’ &c.

Dn. 12:13;

‘But go thy way till the end be;
For thou shalt rest and stand in thy lot at the end of the days.’

Compare Jb. 11:12. 1 S. 28:15. Re. 6:9. Ac. 2:25, &c.

This phrase is common on Jewish monuments for the dead: ‘May his rest be in the garden of Eden, with the other just men of the world’—‘May his soul rest in peace till the Comforter come. And one epitaph is to this effect: ‘This stone which I have placed is a monument for the remains of Rabbi Eliakim, who was buried on the day before the feast of the passover, in the 85th year of his ministry. May his rest be in the garden of Eden with other just men. Amen, amen, amen. Selah.’ Herodian has an expression of similar import, lib. 1, cap. 4, § 8. ‘When he had survived one single day and night, he went to rest, duerat. See Virgil, Aen. 10, v. 745.

‘Olli doru quies oculos, e: ferreus urget

Somnus.

And Aen. 6, v. 372,

‘Sedibus ut saltem placidi in morte quiescam.’

And so some of Gruter's inscriptions: ‘Et quieti aeterno, M. Antini Antoni,’ Vetus Leg. 35, &c. And, ‘Quorum corpora virginem heic condita sunt ad bene quiescendum.’

RESURRECTION, when used symbolically, signifies, according to the Oriental interpreters, a recovery of such rights and liberties as have been taken away, and a deliverance from war, persecution, affliction, and bondage.

What is said in Ez. 37:11-14, is conformable to these notions, the resurrection there spoken of being to be understood as there explained, of a deliverance of the Jews from thralldom and captivity, and a restoration of them to their own lands. For when resurrection is spoken of a political body, it is to be understood proportionably of a political resurrection of that body in the like power.

Paul uses the same phrase in the same meaning, Ro. 11:15; ‘What shall the receiving of them be but life from the dead?’

And Isaiah, ch. 26:19, says,

‘My dead shall live; my deceased shall rise;’ &c.; under this image predicting the deliverance of the people of God from a state of the lowest depression.

It appears from hence, as Lowth observes, contrary to the notion of Warburton in his Divine Legislation, that the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine; for an image which is assumed in order to express anything in the way of allegory, whether poetical or prophetic, must be an image commonly known and understood, otherwise it will not answer the purpose for which it is assumed.

And so the Latin authors have used the word resurgo, as appears from Ovid, Fasti, b. 1, v. 523; Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. 15, c. 32; and Tertullian, Eccl. act. 5, scene 4, v. 12.

RIGHT HAND. Lifting it up denotes swearing.

See Ge. 14:22. Ex. 6:8. Da. 12:7. Re. 10:5, 6, and other places.

Among the Jews, the juror held up his right hand towards heaven, which explains a passage in Ps. 143:8,

‘Whose mouth speaketh vanity,
And their right hand is a right hand of falsehood.’

The same form is retained in Scotland still, and is allowed by law to the Secceders in Ireland.

RIVER may be considered in several views:

1. In respect of its original and return thereto. Is. 1:7, ‘All the rivers run into the sea, yet the sea is not full; to the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again.’

According to this consideration, the sea being a symbol of the extent of the jurisdiction or empire of any potentate, rivers will signify any emissary powers from thence, whether armis or provincial magistrates, or what agents abroad soever, that are under this chief power, and so act in reference to it. These may, according to evict analogy, be called rivers, because both themselves and their afflows have recourse to the main sea,—the amplitude of that jurisdiction to which they belong.

The Oneirocritics say, in ch. 278, ‘The sea is the symbol of a great king. And as all rivers run into the sea, so the wealth of the world flows to him.’ And again—‘New rivers running into the sea signify new revolutions according to the king or kingdom from distant nations.’

2. A river may be considered in respect of its rising, overflowing, and drowning the adjacent parts; and in this view it is the symbol of the invasion of an army. Thus, in Is. 8:22,

God's bringing upon the Jews the waters of the rivers, signifies the warlike expedition of the Assyrians against the Jews. The symbol is used in several other places, as in 1 S. 28:22; 59:19. Jer. 46:7, 8, 47:2. Am. 9:5. Na. 1:8. And in Da. 9:26, flood is immediately explained by war. So Phaethon compares Hannibal's expedition into Italy to a torrent. Horace, b. 4, Od. 14, compares Tiberius driving the enemies to an overflowing river. And Virgil, Aen. 7, v. 228, speaks of the fall of Troy under the similitude of a deluge.

And in Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 27, where the symbol is adapted to private life, a troubled and violent river running into a house, and carrying off or removing the movables therein, denotes an enraged enemy.

On Is. 8:7, above referred to, the note of Bishop Lowth is very pertinent. ‘The gentle waters of Siloah, a small fountain and brook just without Jerusalem, which supplied a pool within the city for the use of the inhabitants, is an apt emblem of the state of the kingdom and house of David, much reduced in its apparent strength, yet supported by the blessing of God; and is finely contrasted with the waters of the Euphrates, great, rapid, and impetuous, the image of the Babylonian empire, which God threatens to bring down, like a mighty flood, upon all these apostates of both kingdoms, as punishment for their manifold iniquities, and their contemptuous disregard of his promises.’ The brook and the river are put for the kingdoms to which they belong, and the different states of which respectively they most aptly represent. Juvenal, inveighing against the corruption of Rome by the importation of Asiatic manners, says, with great elegance, that the Orontes has been long discharging into the Tiber —

‘Janpriden Syria in Tiberin defluxit Orontes.’

And Virgil, to express the submission of some of the Eastern countries to the Roman arms, says, that the waters of Euphrates now flowed more humbly and gently —

‘Euphrates ibat jam mollior undis.’

Æn. 8:726.

The prophet adds, ‘Even to the neck shall he reach.’ He compares Jerusalem to the head in the human body: as when the waters come up to a man's neck, he is very near drowning, for a little increase of them would go over his head; so the king of Assyria, coming up to Jerusalem, was like a flood reaching to the neck,—the whole country was overflowed, and the capital was in imminent danger. Accordingly the Chaldean readers ‘reaching to the neck,’ by ‘reaching to Jerusalem.’

3. A river may be considered as the barrier of a nation or kingdom. And in this respect, if a river or sea be dried up, it is a symbol of ill to the land adjoining. It signifies that its enemies will easily make a conquest thereof, when they find no water to stop their passage.

So Jordan was dried up to give the Israelites passage and possession of the Holy Land. So Isaiah, 44:27, speaking of the conquest of Cyrus, and the destruction of the Babylonian monarchy, has these words —‘that saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers.’

The prophet Zechariah, 10:11, explains the symbol:

‘And he shall pass through the sea with distress unto it, And shall smite the waves in the sea; And all the depths of the river (Nile) shall be dried up, And the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, And the sceptre of Egypt shall depart.’

See, to the same purpose, Is. 11:15, 16, and 19:5, 6.

4. A river may be considered in respect of the clearness, coolness, and excellent taste of its water, and of its usefulness in watering the grounds, and making them verdant and fruitful. And in this view a river may become the symbol of the greatest good. Hence, in the oneirocritics, ‘to dream of drinking of the pure, clear water of a river, denotes an obtainment of joy and happiness by means of a great man.’

The heathen, in order to represent the universal power and benefice of Jupiter, used the symbol of a river flowing from his throne; and to this the Sycophant in Phineus alibiades (Trium. net 4, sc. 2, v. 98) in his saying that he had been at the head of that river:

‘Ad exponit, quod de celo exortor, sub solo Jovi,’ that with God only is the fountain of life, Ps. 36:8, 9, from whom proceed a river of pleasures, representing the comforts and gifts of the Holy Spirit.

And therefore, in relation to private persons receiving the Holy Spirit, to their own joy, and to the advantage of others, our Savior says, Jo. 7:38, ‘He who believeth on Me, as Scripture saith, shall prove a eastern, whence rivers of living water shall flow.’

And in relation to all the inhabitants of the New Jerusalem, the abundance and inexhaustible fund of their happiness is described in Re. 22:1, by their having ‘a river of life, clear as crystal, proceeding from the throne of God and of the Lamb. As the first paradise is represented as watered by a river, that went out of Eden, to water the country,—and as Ezekiel, in his prophetic vision of a new city and temple, represents water in great plenty, flowing from the house or temple,—so it is here. Water being necessary to the support of life, contributing to refreshment, ornament, and delight, is elegantly made a figure to express the glorious and happy immortality of all true Christians in the heavenly state.

That rivers and streams are used as symbols of the Holy Spirit, may be proved by reference to Is. 35:6, 7, compared with 32:15. Job 3:18, 43:3. Ez. 47:17–17. Ps. 65:10, 11. Ps. 68:10. Zech. 13:1. Ps. 72:6.

A Jewish writer says, ‘As our first redeemer (Moses) produced a well, (Nu. 20:17), so our last Redeemer shall produce waters; as it is said, (Job 2:10,) “And a fountain shall go forth from the house of Jehovah, and shall water the valley of Shittim.”’

That rivers were held in veneration by the heathen, is well known; witness the Nile by the Egyptians, of which cains remain to this day, with the inscription, ‘Des Nilo.’ And Seneca, in his Epist. 4, says, ‘Magnorum fluuium capitam veneramus, subita ex abdito vasti annis eruimus aras hæc.’

ROBE. The robe and baldric, or girdle, were the ensigns of power and authority, worn by kings, princes, and men in high station.

The high-priest wore a peculiar one, mentioned in Ex. 28:31.

David was clothed with a robe. 1 Ch. 15:27.

The king of Nineveh, in a time of public repentance, put away his robe from him. Jon. 3:6.

Jesus was invested with a scarlet robe by the insulting Jews, as a mock emblem of royal dignity. Mat. 27:28. Lu. 23:11.

Ezekiel says, concerning Tyre, 24:16,

‘Shall not all the princes of the sea come down from their thrones,

And lay aside their robes,

And put off their embroidered garments?’

as marks of humiliation and depression.

The redeemed are said to be clothed with white robes, Re. 6:11, as expressive of the favor and acceptance of God, and as marks of uprightness, honor, and dignity; for such garments were usually sent by princes as presents and as tokens of royal favor, granted only on special occasions. See Lu. 15:22. See also 2 S. 13:18, where king’s daughters are said to be so apparelled.

See under GARMENT.

ROD. It signifies primarily a shoot or branch of a tree, whence it came to be used for a tribe issuing out from a patriarch, as a branch from its stock, and afterwards for any rod or staff, whether of punishment or authority; and hence it has an appropriate signification, according to the purpose to which it is applied. A particular staff or sceptre is that used by a sovereign magistrate in token of his supreme authority. Sometimes it means the rod or staff which the herdsman or shepherd carried in his hand, and kept his cattle in order with.

As a sceptre, it occurs in Ps. 45:7. Ps. 110:2. Is. 14:5. Ez. 19:11–14. Compare 29.

In the pastoral sense, it occurs Ps. 23:4. Ez. 20:37. Mi. 7:15. Ie. 27:32.

As the symbol of correction, it is used in 2 S. 7:14. Jb. 9:34; and 21:9.

In Ge. 49:10, the sceptre seems to denote, not regal authority, but tribual jurisdiction, or that exercised by the head of a tribe. Hence used for the ruler himself, Ge. 49:16. Compare verse 28, and 2 S. 7:7, with 1 Ch. 17:5.

Besides all these, there is the measuring-rod, for marking out portions of land to be purchased or inherited. Thus Jer. 10:16, and 51:19, ‘Israel is called the rod of God’s inheritance.’ Every nation had its supposed tutelary deity, who might with propriety be styled its portion, on account of the peculiar relation that subsisted between them. The portion of Jacob, therefore, is the same as the God of Jacob, who had marked Israel out for his own possession, as with a measuring-rod, and to whom the name of Jehovah belonged.

Ez. 20:37,
‘And I will cause you to pass under the rod,
And I will bring you under the chastisement of the covenant?’

i. e., the chastisement due to you for breaking my covenant. But there may be an allusion here to the custom of numbering flocks and herds, by striking them with a rod, and of thus severing some for preservation and some for slaughter.

Ez. 21:10, ‘It contemneth the rod of my son,’ &c. This obscure passage appears better rendered thus:

‘Alas, the sceptre of my son is destroyed;
It despiseth every tree;’

by my son, meaning the people of God, who are so called, Ex. 4:22. Ho. 11:1, and referring the event to Nebuchadnezzar, who took away the sceptre and overthrew the kingdom.

In Is. 10:5, the Assyrian is called ‘the rod of God’s anger.’ In Jer. 1:11, a rod of an almond-tree is explained by the Targum of a king hastening to destroy, because the shekel, almond-tree, is a hasty builder, having its name from shekel, to hasty, or to do evil, or to watch for that purpose, as in Is. 29:20.

Amongst the pagans, magicians and augurs in their divinations made use of a rod, sceptre, or staff, which they pretended was given them by some god for that purpose.

And thus, in opposition to the rods of the magicians, which they used in their enchantments, God commanded Moses to make use of his rod or walking-staff in the working of miracles in Egypt, and which is therefore called, in Ex. 17:9, the rod of God. See more in Banzo on this subject, art. Rod.

The Egyptian hieroglyphic of a sceptre, with an eye on the top of it, denoted a wise king or government.

In Ez. 37:16, a rod, from its name, being the same with that of a tribe, is used symbolically to signify the tribe of Judah, with all its adherents; as another, with the name of Ephraim, to denote all the apostate Israelites.

ROOT is the producer and bearer of a tree, and so denotes the origin from whence a person has his rise or bring.

Thus Christ, who, in respect of his human nature, is the offspring, the son and successor of David in the government of the Jews, is also in respect of his divine nature, the Root of David, the Lord from whom David received his government. See Re. 5:5. 22:16. Is. 11:10. 53:2. Ro. 15:12.

It is also put for the origin or first principle of any disposition or passion. See 1 Th. 6:10. De. 29:18. He. 12:15.

To take root, or to become rooted, denotes permanency and multiplication. Jb. 5:3. Ps. 80:10. Is. 27:6, &c.

The withering of the root, on the contrary, signifies destruction. Jb. 18:16. Is. 5:24. Ho. 9:16.

Jn. 19:28 is thus rendered by Durell, preferably to the common version:

‘Surely, ye shall say, Why have ye persecuted him?

Hath any ground of charge been found in him?’

S.

SACRIFICE is put for slaughter in several passages; among others, in Ez. 39:17,

‘Come to my sacrifice which I make for you.’

This bold imagery is founded on the custom of invitations to feasts after sacrifices. See Ge. 31:54. 1 S. 16:3. Zph. 1:7. Compare Is. 34:6, which Ezekiel seems to have imitated, and Re. 19:17, 18, where we find Ezekiel’s animated address to the birds of prey, and even some of his expressions. The prophet has indulged the bent of his genius in a sublime amplification. By the rams, bullocks, and he-goats, in verse 18, of Ezekiel, are naturally expressed kings, princes, and tyrants; and the table of God, in verse 20, is the field covered with dead bodies, the place of the slaughter of Magog.

In Ja. 5:5, ‘Ye have nourished your hearts, as in a day of slaughter,’ properly, sacrifice; there is the same allusion to a feast after a sacrifice.

SALT. Salt hinders flesh from corruption, and makes it keep, and is therefore the symbol of incorruption, eternity, and perpetual duration.

Thus, in Nu. 18:19, ‘All the heave-offerings of the holy things, which the children of Israel offer unto the Lord, have I given thee, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee, by a statute forever: it is a covenant of salt forever.’ See Horne’s Intrud. vol. iii. p. 192.

So again, 2 Ch. 13:5, ‘The Lord God of Israel gave the kingdom to David forever by a covenant of salt.’

And so Lot’s wife, Ge. 19:26, ‘became a pillar of salt,’ i. e., she was overtaken by the miraculous sulphurous shower, and thereby fixed and incrusted like a statue; and becoming thus changed, symbolically showed that she was a standing or perpetual monument of divine vengeance.

Agreeably to this is our Lord’s discourse in Mk. 9:48,49, who says, that the torments of the wicked shall be like that of those who are gnawed by a perpetual worm, in reference to their conscience; and that they shall be tormented also by an unquenchable fire, in reference to their body. He then proceeds—‘for every one shall be salted with fire;’ i. e., every one shall be salted or preserved by that very fire which torments him.

Salt is the emblem of barrenness—‘All places,’ as Pliny observes, ‘where salt is found, are barren, and produce nothing.’ De. 29:33,

‘The whole land thereof shall be brimstone, and burning salt; it is not sown, nor bears, nor any herb grows thereon, like the overthrow of Sodom,’ &c. The land surrounding the Dead Sea is strongly impregnated with acid salt, and produces no plants: the very air is loaded with it, and cannot suit vegetation; ‘whence,’ says Volney, ‘that aspect of death which reigns around the lake.’ See Jud. 9:35, and Zph. 2:9. Ez. 47:11. Jer. 17:6. The passage in Ezekiel seems to be applied allegorically, meaning, that some shall reject the gospel, and some receive it without obeying it. And so in Ps. 107:34, according to the original, ‘A fruitful land into saltiness?’

Salt is the symbol of hospitality; see Ezr. 4:14; ‘Now, forasmuch as we are maintained from the king’s palace,’ literally, ‘we are salted with the salt of the palace.’ Salt, being a wholesome and necessary ingredient in human diet, has always been, and still is, among the Eastern nations, the symbol of hospitality and friendship. See Mede’s Works, p. 370; Herbelot, Harmer, Cudworth, &c., cited by Parkhurst, Heb. Lex. p. 380. Diogenes Laertius, in his Life of Pythagoras, tells us that, concerning salt, it was his maxim that it ought to have its place upon our tables as a memento of justice and integrity, it being preservative of whatever it lays hold upon, and made out of the purest materials, water and the sea.

See Le. 2:13, where God prescribes that salt shall always constitute a part of the offerings made to him.

Salt, on account of its use in preserving food, and rendering it palatable, was anciently made the emblem of wisdom and virtue. In allusion to this, Paul ordered the Colossians, Col. 4:6, ‘to season their speech with salt, that it might be preserved from the corruption, condemned in Ep. 4:29. Macknight thinks the apostle might possibly refer to those elegant turns in conversation which, from the Athenians, took the name of Attic salt.

Salt is the emblem of peace; Mk. 9:50, where the copulative may be considered as exegetical—‘Have salt in yourselves, that is, have peace one with another.’ Being used at meals, and in sacrifices, it became a sort of bond of union, and hence a symbol of peace. Isidore says, Atav. Savagia. κ. τ. λ., ‘I wonder very much how it happens that robbers, who brandish their naked swords and arm themselves against those who have never injured them, after partaking of their salt, cease to be robbers.’

SAND, as being an aggregate body of countless particles, is naturally employed as the symbol of multitudes.

Considered as the barrier of the sea merely, it is the symbol of hope and safety, such as the shipwrecked mariner experiences when he reaches the shore.

God graciously promised Abraham that his posterity should be without number, as the sand. Ge. 22:17. 32:12.

And the quantity of corn which Joseph collected in Egypt is compared to the sand of the sea. Ge. 41:49.

And Hosea, speaking of the restoration from captivity, 1:10, says,

‘Yet shall the number of the sons of Israel be as the sand of the sea, Which cannot be measured or numbered.’

HORNE CALLS ARYTHAS

‘Maris et terra terrae parentis arena
Merorum.’

Jeremiah, 5:22, beautifully describes the power of God, as displayed in his making the sand a boundary to the ocean—

‘Will ye not fear Me? saith Jehovah; Will ye not tremble at my presence? Who have appointed the sand a bound to the sea, A perpetual ordinance, and it shall not go beyond it; Though it lies itself about, yet shall it not prevail; Though the waves thereof roar, yet shall they not go beyond it.’

Sand, as symbolizing a multitude, is used by Pindar and others. And in Euripides, die alkyonos, the numberless, are the common people who are of no account. And Homer employs the same, Il. 2, 307, and Il. 9, 385.

Sand is a well-known characteristic of extensive deserts. See Strabo, b. 16, p. 522; and Lucian, Opp. T. 2, p. 841.

SCORPION is explained by the oneirocritics of a wicked enemy, or mischievous, contemptible person. ‘For the scorpion is constantly shaking his tail to strike, and the torment caused by his sting is very grievous.’

Hence Ezekiel, 2:6, compares the wicked Israelites to scorpions. And the author of the book of Ecclesiasticus, 26:7, compares a man that hath a shrew to his wife, to one that taketh hold of a scorpion.

Scorpions, as well as locusts, hurt only for five months. Re. 9:10.

The scorpion, on some coins of Hadrian, is said to denote Africa, either in reference to that country as the birth place of multitudes of these creatures, or to the wiles and subtleties of the Carthaginians, as being pertinacious, and as engaging in wars. It is understood by divines to be an emblem of the evil spirit; as in Lam. 10:19, where serpents and scorpions, and all the power of the enemy, are mentioned in connection with Satan falling from heaven, and with the subjection of the spirits or demons to the apostles.

SEA, in the Hebrew language, is any collection of waters, as in Ge. 1:9, 'the collections of waters He called seas.' So likewise what St. Matthew calls Θαλάσσαν, sea, 8:24, is by Luke, 8:23, called Ἄγρυντον, lake.

The Colchi, also, as Bochart proves, called takes by the name of sea. And Agyrion lake, in Hesiod, stands for the ocean. Theog. v. 305.

A sea clear and serene, denotes an orderly collection of men in a quiet and peaceable state.

A sea troubled and tumultuous, denotes a collection of men in motion and war.

Either way — the waters signifying people, and the sea being a collection of waters — the sea becomes the symbol of people, gathered into one body politic, kingdom, or jurisdiction, or united in one design.

And therefore, the soteriocrates say, in ch. 178, 'If any dream he is master of the sea, he will be entire successor in the whole kingdom.' And again — 'If a king see the sea troubled by a wind from a known quarter, he will be molested by some motion from that quarter. But if he see the sea calm, he will enjoy his kingdom in peace.'

And in the same chapter, the sea and deep are interpreted of a great king.

Agreeably to this, in Da. 7:2, the great sea agitated by the four winds, is a comprehension of several kings or kingdoms in a state of war; one kingdom fighting against another to enlarge their dominions.

See under FISSES.

In Ps. 65:7, these two are classed together, showing the analogy —

'Who stilleth the noise of the sea,
The noise of their waves,
And the tumults of the people.'

In Jer. 51:42, 'The sea is come up over Babylon.'

Here the sea is put metaphorically for a numerous army, and the overspreading of waters, for the invasion and conquest of the country.

In Is. 60:5, 'The riches of the sea shall be poured in upon thee,' is explained by the next line.

'And the wealth of the nations shall come to thee,' meaning the inhabitants of the islands, and their devotedness to the gospel.

Re. 4:6, 'Before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal,' is an allusion to that which was in the temple of old, 1 K. 7:23, and seems to denote the purity that is required in all who make a near approach to the presence of God.

Re. 8:9, 'The third part of the creatures which were in the seas, and had life, died.'

See Ez. 20:33, &c.

Re. 10:2, 'He set his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth.'

As earth and sea make up this terraqueous globe, so the inhabitants of the earth and sea seem, in this prophecy, to mean the inhabitants of this world at large. See Re. 12:12, 13. But Sir Isaac Newton thinks the expression represents the angel standing with one foot on Asia, and the other on Europe, to signify that the prophecies he was about to reveal would relate to both the empires of the east and west.

Re. 13:1, 'I saw a beast rise up out of the sea,' i. e., a new dominion or government, which should owe its origin to the commotions of the people.

Re. 13:2, 'I saw a sea of glass, mingled with fire.' Of this it is difficult to give a satisfactory interpretation.

Re. 21:1, 'and there was no more sea,' i. e., there were no turbulent spirits to disturb the peace of that happy state — for the new heavens and new earth merely denote a new order of things, in which former sorrows and troubles shall no more be remembered.

Vitrinius says, 'The sea in general, in a mystical sense, is taken for the world as opposed to the church, or for that part of the earth where there is no worship of the true God; for as the globe is divided into two parts, earth and sea, so the world is divided into two parts, that within and that without the church, which last comes under the name of sea, as being in continual communion, as incipient of cultivation, as the seat of storms and tempests, and dangerous to navigate. Hence the wicked are compared to it in Is. 57:20.'

The same author observes, on Re. 21:1, 2, that there was no sea in the New Jerusalem. John saw there no pagans or idolaters, because in that latter period the whole world will receive the true worship of God; therefore the sea, in the mystical sense, will be abolished, and the whole new world will be changed into earth, or land.

Ewaldius supposes that by the earth, or land, in Re. 10:2, is meant Judea, and by the sea, Gentilism; and that his posture, with one foot on each, denotes dominion, lordship, or conquest, since to place the foot on any one implies this. See Ps. 110:1; De. 11:24; Jos. 13:1; Cu. 15:27, &c.

Among the ancients, the sea was the symbol of various matters, 1. Of the world and its vanities, according to the Persian proverb, 'He who covets this world's goods, is like one who drinks sea-water; the more he drinks, the more he increases thirst, nor does he cease to drink until he dies.' 2. Of calamities and persecutions. Thus, Ps. 19:1, 2, 14, 15, 19:1-4, 5, 3. Of inconstancy.

SEALING. Sealing has several acceptations.

1. It denotes preservation and security. Thus, in Song 4:12, 'a fountain sealed,' is a fountain carefully preserved from the injuries of weather and beasts, that its water may be preserved good and clean.

In Jb. 14:17, 'Sins sealed up in a bag,' signify that no sin shall be forgot. And thus, for the greater security, the stone at the mouth of our Savior's sepulchre was sealed with a seal.

2. It denotes also propriety, from the custom of sealing goods and servants when they were bought, that it might be known to whom they belonged.

3. Sealing denotes secrecy and privacy; men sealing up those things which they intend to keep secret.

Thus, a book sealed, Re. 5:1, is a book whose contents are secret, and have for a very long time been so, and are not to be published till the seal be removed. Horace has used the like symbol, b. 1, Ep. 20, v. 3.

And in Is. 29:11, 'a vision like to a book sealed,' is a vision not understood.

4. Sealing sometimes signifies completion and perfection; because the putting of the seal to any instrument or writing completes the matter about which it is, and finishes the whole transaction.

Thus, concerning the king of Tyre, the prophet Ezekiel says, 28:19, 'Thou sealst up the sum (or measure) full of wisdom and glory;' that is, thou lookest upon thyself as having arrived at the highest pitch of wisdom and glory.

Thus the Arabians call the Koran 'the seal of God's promises,' as being, according to them, the completion or perfection of God's promises; and Mahomet, 'the seal of the prophets,' as being, according to them, the greatest of the prophets, after whom no more are to follow.

5. Sealing signifies assent, confirmation, and authority, from the use of a seal's being put to decrees, diplomas, covenants, and wills.

Thus, in Ne. 9:39, the princes, the priests, and Levites, to show their assent to it, sealed the covenant. And sealing has the same signification in Jo. 3:33.

In Est. 8:8, a writing sealed with the king's seal, denotes the will and pleasure of the king, and that it is unalterable, not to be reversed.

And hence a person sealed, signifies a person authorized and commissioned; as, in relation to our Savior, concerning his giving that meat which endureth to everlasting life, says John, 6:27, 'Him hath God the Father sealed.'

Hence the bearing of a ring or seal is the token of a high office. See Ge. 41:41.

And therefore, in Aristophanes, the giving of a ring to a person is making him chief magistrate or high steward; and the taking away of the ring is the discharging him of his office.

And to the same purpose speak the Persian and Indian Interpreters in ch. 200, concerning a ring or seal.

6. Sealing signifies hinderance and restraint, to put a cessation to, or stop the effect of any design. Thus, in Jb. 37:7, God is said to seal up the hand of every man; i. e., to hinder their work by storms and wet weather, or to restrain their power.

And so in Jb. 9:9, he is said to seal up the stars; i. e., to restrain their influences.

And thus in Aeschylus, Eumen. v. 830, &c., thunder sealed up, is thunder restrained, not used, or laid aside.

In Ep. 1:13, 'Ye were sealed with the promised Holy Spirit,' there is thought to be an allusion to the magic rings and seals common amongst the Ephesian idolaters, used as amulets or charms, and for other similar purposes, as mentioned by Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromata, lib. 1, and by Lucian, Philops. 1, 2; also by Aeschylus in Phdt. The Ecclesia zapparia, or Ephesian letters, were thought to have the same virtue. To such as these vain securities, the apostle opposes the sacred seal of the Holy Spirit, as an earnest of their heavy inheritance.

SEE. To see is, in several places, a prophetic expression, showing the proper work of the prophets. For, in 1 S. 9:9, he that was in those days called a prophet, was beforetime called a seer, and, therefore, their inspiration, when it was given them by symbols, comes under the name of seeing, or vision, as in Nut. 24:4, 16.

And this is the very style of the heathens, as appears from Euripides and Virgil. Helen. v. 753; Am. b. 6, v. 86, 87.

Vetus that belong to the human senses are often put for one another in the best authors. Thus, to see a voice, is an expression used by the sacred writers, and by Aeschylus. Ex. 20:18, Re. 1:12; Prometh. v. 21.

Aristophanes uses ξεωτας της Σηρας, taste the door, instead of feel the door.

And Petronius, a nice author as to matters of style, says, 'Needum libaverunt cellulam limen.' See also Lucretius, b. 1, v. 645.

The eyes often sympathize with the affections of the soul, and therefore, to see, in Scripture, frequently signifies to rejoice or to be grieved, according to the circumstances of the person affected.

Thus old Simeon, when he saw our Savior, said, 'Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace, according to thy word, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation'; i. e., I shall now die in peace and joy, because I have seen my Savior.

So in Ls. 64:18, 'If I regard iniquity in my heart, in the Lord will not bear me'; i. e., if I take delight in sin, God will not bless me.

In like manner, as to the affection of sorrow, 2 K. 7:2, 'Thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not eat thereof'; i. e., thou shalt have the sorrow not to enjoy the benefit of it.

See also 2 K. 22:20; Est. 8:6; Ps. 112:10; 1 S. 2:23; De. 28:34. So in profane authors, in relation to joy, pascere oculos, to feed the eyes, signifies to take a delight in seeing; in oculis gestare, to carry a person in one's eyes, is to love him dearly, to desire to have him always present.

And in relation to sorrow, a thing done before the eyes heightens the grief, as in several places in Terence and Virgil.

So in Ls. 1:48, 'He bath regarded the low estate of his handmaid,' means, He has taken a delight in favoring her, so as to account her worthy of the greatest honor.

And on the other hand, our seeing God, denotes the large and clear knowledge we shall have of Him, the inconceivable pleasure of contemplating Him, the joy of loving and of being loved by Him; all which is fitly represented by seeing, sight being of all our senses the most noble and refined.

SEPULCHRE occurs several times in Scripture in a symbolical sense; as in Ps. 51:10, 'Their throat is an open sepulchre,' and so of the Chaldeans, in Jer. 51:16.

'Their Oliver is an open sepulchre;

'All their nobles are mighty men.'

And our Lord, in Mat. 23:27, compares the Pharisees to whitened sepulchres, as being hypocrites.

Sepulchres, as he observes, are full of dead men's bones, and all uncleanness; and though the Pharisees outwardly had a show of sanctity, their inward principles were evidently unclean and corrupt.

Those who had led the dead, were considered as polluted; and hence burying-grounds were generally without the city, in places remote from the usual commerce of men. So our Lord's character of the Pharisees shows that He considered them as dangerous guides in religion. And in Lu. 11:44, He calls them 'graves that appear not,' as those of the poor no doubt often were, being concealed with grass and weeds. See Nu. 19:16. Because the Pharisees concealed, under a cloak of sanctity, the real abominations of their hearts, and professed a strict regard to the letter of the law, while they were filled with malice, covetousness, and vain-glory.

In the same chapter, viz. Mat. 23:29, He says, 'Ye garnish the sepulchres of the righteous,' in allusion to a custom prevalent among the Greeks, as well as among the Jews, of repairing and adorning the monuments of those who had merit well of them, or who had suffered an undeserved death. Thus Homer, Il. 16,

'τις φίλος καὶ πόλις, ἀπὸ τοῦ μέλλοντος τιμῆσαι,
'A mate lord and pyramid shall raise,
And healing honor to his ashes give;
His fame ('tis all the dead can have) shall live.'

And Raphelius produces a passage from Xenophon to this effect: — 'If any one do not eden (the very term used in the gospel) the sepulchres of his dead parents, the state will inquire into it in the investigation of the magistrates.' And Lucian has the following — 'Those who have valuable and lofty monuments on the earth, and columns, and images, and inscriptions, are not more honorable in the shades below than the plebeian dead.' All these things were done 'to be seen by men,' and our Lord traces them all to the principle of vain ostentation.

' Yet et omnes bones from insult to protect,
Some frail memorial still erected high,
With unouth rhymes and shapeless soul we fecked,
Implants the passing tribute of a sight.

The Jews were in the habit of visiting the sepulchres of the dead; and hence they thought, when Mary, the sister of Lazarus, went out, that she had gone to the grave to weep there. They even erected temples over the sepulchres, and performed religious worship therein. Mahomet is said to have excommunicated them on this account. The prophet, in his last disease, from which he never arose, said, 'May God curse the Jews, for they convert the sepulchres of their prophets into temples.'

As to whitened sepulchres, Dr. Shaw observes, that 'tombs among the Moors, with the very walls of their cupolas and enclosures, are constantly kept clean, white-washed, and beautified, and so far continue to illustrate the expressions of our Savior. It is in reference to this that Paul calls Ananias a whited wall, Ac. 23:3, an expression which proved prophetic; for Ananias, after having contributed to the ruin of his country, by a powerful faction which he had raised, and which produced many calamities, was slain after the revolt of the Jews, A. D. 66, with his brother; and fell not by the hand of the Romans, but by another fiction of the Jews, which was headed by his own son.' Tillemont, H. E. 1, p. 274.

SERPENT. The symbol of Satan, who is called the 'old serpent.' Re. 12:9.

This symbol occurs frequently in Scripture, viz.

I Co. 12:3, 'I fear, as the serpent beguiled Eve through his subtlety.'

Lu. 10:19,20, 'I give you power to tread on serpents and scorpions, and over all the power of the enemy,' &c. 'Notwithstanding, in this rejoice not, that the spirits are subject to you, hut,' &c.

Re. 12:12, 'The devil is come down to you, having great wrath.'

Re. 12:14, 'And the woman was nourished for a time and times, and half a time, from the face of the serpent.'

Re. 20:2, 'And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, who is the devil and Satan, and bound him a thousand years.'

Hence the phrases, 'offspring of vipers,' Mat. 3:7, and 'children of the devil,' Jn. 8:44, may be considered to be parallel.

The Jews acknowledge the serpent to be the symbol of Satan. In the cabalistic book, entitled Tikkum Sopher, quoted by Vitrina, Obsrv. Sacr. Tit. I, p. 15, we read, 'He said to them, That serpent with which ye contend, that ye may escape from him, is the same who hath slain and devoured others, and not only the first man, but all generations.' And Maimonides, Mor. Nov. p. 2, c. 39, 'Samuel i, i, e. the serpent seducing Eve) is no other than Satan himself, whatever secret that name may signify; he is also called Nachash, a serpent.'

Those passages of the fathers, in which this symbol is adverted to, may be seen in Suicer's Thesaurus, article Ophis.

It is well known that the serpent was worshipped with divine honors among many ancient nations. See Herodotus, Ethan, and others. Sidonius Apollinaris has this passage:

'Magus Alexander necnon Augustus talentor Concept Serpua Deo.'

See also the O-tavim of Minucius Felix.

We find many ancient coins with the figure of serpents; and somewhere an altar is exhibited, and a serpent, to whom Victory is sacrificing. See Spanheim de usu Numismat., and Oisel on the same subject, who has a plate representing a serpent with a green tree, as if the worship of the serpent had been derived from the seduction of Eve in the garden.

We learn from the New Testament, that Satan was considered by our Lord as the 'prince of this world,' Jn. 14:31; and by Paul, as the 'god of this world,' 2 Cor. 4:4. In allusion to which, the apostle observes, Ep. 6:12, 'We wrestle not against flesh and blood (only), but against principalities and power, against the rulers of this dark world, against wicked spirits in high places.' And hence idolatry is termed in Ps. 106:37, a sacrificing their sons and daughters unto devils or demons. And the same is affirmed in 1 Co. 32:17, 1 Co. 10:20, Re. 9:20. In Ep. 2:2, Satan is called the 'prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience;' and in 1 Co. 2:14, he is said to 'have the power of death,' from which men can only be delivered by a Redemer.

As the head of the serpent is the seat of life, hence the overthrow of Satan's power is called 'burning or crushing the serpent's head.' Ge. 3:15, Ro. 16:20) has a plain reference to the same subject. And this overthrow is attributed to the Messiah, 1 Jn. 3:2.

Among the Hebrews, Nichash, or Nehash, was the name of the land-serpent, and of that tribe of animals in general; the river-serpent, crocodile, &c. they called teina. Among the Latins, the water-snakes were called angules; the land-snakes, serpentes; and when these animals were consecrated, and in temples, dracoines, from which our term dragon. And so Virgil styles them, when they are said to be hid at the feet of Pallas, Aen. 2, v. 225:

'At genial laps debora ad summa dracones
Erigamus,' &c.

The Egyptians reputed the serpent to be an emblem of their god Cneph, by which word they meant the Demiurgen, or maker of all things. And the Phenicians seem to have represented, in their mystic figures of the serpent, the power by which all things consist. See Shuckford, vol. iv.

The sharp, mentioned by Moses, Nu. 21:6, are no where called dragons, but are a species of serpent, which probably had that name from the heat or burning pain occasioned by their bite, or from their vivid, fiery color; for sharpp signifies to burn. See also De. 8:15. The Septuagint call it 'the biting serpent.' It is referred to in Is. 14:29 —

'For from the nest of the serpent shall come forth a basilisk, And his fruit shall be a fiery flying serpent.'

1. 31:6,

'The burin of the land travelling southward,
Through a land of distress and affliction,
Whence come forth the lions, and the fierce lion,
The viper and the fiery flying serpent;
describing the deserts through which the Israelites passed in their journeys, and which were designed to be a barrier between them and Egypt. It is remarkable, that the seraphim, or cherubim emblems, derive their name from the same root, meaning burning spirits.

The serpent or dragon is employed by the sacred writers as the symbol of solitude and desolation; for as venomous and loathsome creatures generally hide themselves in uninhabited places, amidst mists, reeds, and rubbish, so, where there is any mention of the ruin of a city, or the desolation of a province, the place is said to be a dwelling for dragons. Thus, Is. 32:2.

'And wolves shall howl to one another in their palaces,
And dragons in their voluptuous pavilions.'

similar to what Milton has said, Par. Lo t, b. II, 173,

'And in their palaces,
Where luxury late raign'd, reprobates whelp'd,
And stabb'd.'

I. 34:13;

'And in her palaces shall spring up thorns,
The nettle and the bramble, in her fortresses;
And she shall become a habitation for dragons,
A court for the daughters of the asps.'

Jer. 9:11,

'And I will reduce Jerusalem into heaps, a den of dragons,
And the cities of Judah will I make a desolation without inhabitant.'

When the opposite picture is intended, that is, a recovery from desolation, then the following language is used: Is. 23:5,

'And the redb. or gwling sand, shall become a pool,
And the thirsty soil bottling springs;
And in the haunts of dragons shall spring forth
The grass, with the reed, and the bulrush.'

In Ps. 148:7, amongst other parts of creation invited to praise God, we find the following:

'Praise Jehovah, ye dragons, and all deep meaning, ye great serpents, and all deep caverns, where they dwell.'

The Hebrew words tenim and tenut seem sometimes to be applied to an animal of a different species, though our translators, without discrimination, have rendered them by dragons in the following passages: Jn. 30:29. Mt. 12:34. Ma. 12:34. From the noise, wailing, or whining, ascribed to it by Micah, it more probably means the jackal, or shakal, which, in the night, makes a lamentable, howling noise, as Pococke, Shaw, and Bochart remark.

In Jer. 51:34, Nebuchadnezzar is compared to a dragon —

'He hath swallowed us up like a dragon; he hath filled his mouth;
From our Eden (or Paradise) he hath cast us out.'

where there seems to be an allusion to the ejection of the first human pair from the garden of God's planting. According to the encyclopedias, the dragon is the symbol of a king that is an enemy.

Jn. 20:13;

'By His Spirit He hath garnished the heavens;
His hand hath formed the crooked serpent.'

The Septuagint read — 'hath killed the rebel dragon.'

It is difficult to say to what this applies. The rabbits apply it to the constellation called Dracon; Parkhurst, to some sea-monster. Schleusner explains it — 'Serpenter celestis se fuga propteritem.'

Re. 12:3, the dragon here seems intended to represent some fierce and powerful enemy of the Christian church; and, from the description given of its seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon its head, we are led to infer that the Roman power is here meant, since to no other does this description so well apply. This dragon is said to have fought (see verse 7) with Michael and his angels; and, in verse 9, he is said to be cast out or dismounted. The whole seems to intimate, that there should be a sharp contention between faithful Christians on the one hand, and the maintainers of error, idolatry, and wickedness, on the other, represented by these two symmetrical classes; which contention should at last end in a complete victory over the enemies of true religion. The language employed appears to allude to the fall of the rebel angels, at a period prior to the creation of the present world; but we are left so much in the dark on that subject, that the allusion is mere matter of conjecture.

As to the beast, spoken of in Re. 13:1, who spake like a dragon, it is extremely difficult to give any satisfactory interpretation of what is meant by it. The opinions of commentators differ so widely from each other, and appear so little in accordance with the prophetic description, that one is compelled to leave the matter undetermined. That which seems most plausible, is the explanation given by Bishop Newton, who considers the ten-horned beast to be the Roman state in general, and the two-horned beast to be the Roman church in particular. And his 'speaking like a dragon,' he explains to mean, 'his usurping divine titles and honors — his commanding idolatry, and his persecuting and slaying the true worshippers of God and faithful servants of Jesus Christ.'

We read in the 21st chapter of the first book of Macrobius, that 'two serpents were carved under the images of Asclepius and Health, because they bring it to pass, that the human constitution is again renewed by their influence, as serpents are by throwing off their skins.'

Herodotus, likewise, in his 8th book, says, that 'the ancients worshipped the gods and genii of any place under the form of serpents.' Hence Persius's expression, Sat. I, I. III,

'Pinge duos angues: Poeni, sacer est locus.'

The serpent was adored in Egypt as the emblem of the divine nature, not only on account of its great vigor and spirit, but of its extended age and reverence. In Cashmere, also, there were no less than 700 places where carved figures of snakes were worshipped. In Salsette and Elephant, almost all the deities either grasp serpents in their hands, or are environed with them, which can only be intended as a mark of their divinity. In the hieroglyphic sculpture of Egypt, their wreathed bodies represented the ecliptic course of the stars, while the same bodies formed into a circle were an emblem of eternity; and the serpent was one of the most conspicuous of the forty-eight great constellations, into which the ancients divided the visible heavens. Manrique's Ind. Antig. vol. ii, p. 109.

SEVEN. Of all the sacred numbers, this is the most ancient and remarkable; the most ancient, as marking the septenary division of time from the creation of the world; and the most remarkable, as being used to set forth a great variety of events and mysterious circumstances.

It may be viewed in two lights, as the symbol of perfection, and as the symbol of rest. God consecrated the seventh day as a day of repose; and every seventh year was sabbatical, as being consecrated to the rest of the earth. The rest of the seventh day, or Sabbath, according to the apostle, He. 4:4, intimates eternal rest.

Seven times seven, or the forty-ninth year, introduced the year of jubilee. Jacob's seven years' service to Laban; Pharaoh's seven fat oxen, and seven lean ones; the seven branches of the golden candlesticks; the seven trumpets, and seven priests who sounded them; the seven days' siege of Jericho; the seven churches, seven spirits, seven stars, seven seals, seven vials, and many others, sufficiently prove the importance of this sacred number.

But in several places, seven, like ten, is put indefinitely for many. Thus, Is. 41:1, 'seven women'; i. e. several or many women.

Ps. 126:5, 'Silver purified seven times'; i. e. many times.

Ps. 79:12, 'Render to our neighbors seven fold'; i. e. punish them severely.

Ps. 96:16, 'Seven men that can render a reason'; i. e. many men.

The word seven (Heb. sheba), in its radical meaning, imports sufficiency, fulness, plenitude. And the seven prismatic colors, and the seven sounds of the octave, seem to give it a universality which no other number possesses. Cicero declares, that it contains the mystery of all things. Hippocrates affirms, that this number, by its occult virtues, tends to the evolution of all things; and he, like Shakespeare, divides the life of man into seven ages.

Even in the heathen world, we find traces of this favorite number—the seven wise men of Greece; the seven wonders of the world; the seven stars; the seven chiefs before Thebes; the seven bulls' hides in the shield of Ajax, and many more.

We have also the seven heavens of the rabbins, the seven sacraments of the church of Rome, the seven champions of Christendom, the common phrase of a man's seven senses, the seven years' apprenticeship, seven years' transportation, and the like.

In the divine economy, in respect of chastisements, it is very evident. Thus, in Jb. 5:12, the just is only smitten six times, but not a seventh; "He shall deliver thee in six troubles; yea, in seven there shall no evil touch thee."

"Thus, also, in Ez. 9:2, six men are employed to destroy, but the seventh has the lirkhorn, whereby they that were to be saved are marked.

Philo observes, that nature loves the number seven; which Censorinus confirms, by saying, that "the said number was of great efficacy in every thing."

Farther, the two numbers of four and seven are observed by Hippocrates to be critical in the growth and resolution of fevers. He says, "Of seven days, the fourth is the index; of the next septenary, the beginning of it, viz. the eighth day; and the eleventh as being the fourth of the second septenary; and the seventeenth as being the fourth from the fourteenth," &c.

Shebo, seven, is plainly derived from shebo, he was full. And so, shebo, to swear, is derived from the signification of fullness; an oath being an end of all strife for confirmation. He, 6:16, when things are unseen or future, to content for the present, to satisfy and fill the mind.

Zch. 4:10, "These seven are the eyes of Jehovah, which run to and fro through the whole earth."

Mede interprets this of the seven principal angels which minister before the throne of God, and are therefore called archangels. That the Jews had a notion or tradition of this kind, appears from the paraphrase on Ge. 11:7, where the words, "Go to, let us go down, and confound their language," are thus paraphrased—"The Lord spoke to the seven angels which stand before Him, Go to now, let us go down," &c.

These seven archangels seem to be considered as the privy council of God, to whom his secret purposes are made known before their accomplishment.

And here in Zechariah, the seven lamps are said to be, i. e., to denote the seven eyes of the Lord; that is, the seven watchers or prime ministers of his providence. This is confirmed by John, Re. 4:5, who says, he "saw seven lamps before the throne, which are the seven Spirits of God." And again, Re. 5:6, "I saw a lamb having seven horns and seven eyes, which are the seven Spirits of God, sent from all the earth," nearly the very words of Zechariah. Josephus, de Bellis Iudaico, b. 6, c. 6, affirms that the seven lamps signify the seven planets, and that they stood slopingwise, to express the obliquity of the zodiac. This is a notion of his own; but the Jewish astrologers considered the seven angels to be the prefects of the seven planets. In the salutation set down, Re. 1:4,5, the language is, "Grace be unto you, and peace from Him who is, who was, and who is to come, and from the seven Spirits which are before his throne, and from Jesus Christ, the faithful witness." Here the seven Spirits are put between the Deity and his Son. And in Re. 8:2, "I saw," says John, "the seven angels who stood before God, and to them were given seven trumpets." These are the chief princes mentioned in Dn. 10:13—¹ Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me.² And we find Paul adiring Timothy thus: "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect angels," meaning not the angels in general, but the seven archangels which stand before the throne of God.

And hence in Persia, whose monarchy was at one time regulated in part by Daniel as prime minister, there were seven chief princes, so that the Persian court, in that respect, resembled the hierarchy of heaven. They are twice mentioned in Scripture: Est. 1:14; the seven princes of Media and Persia, who raw the king's face, and sat first in the kingdom; and in Artavates' commission to Ezra, 7:14; they are called the king's seven counsellors.

Perhaps, when the church of Jerusalem chose seven deacons to minister in the society, they had an eye the same way.

And we find the angel that appeared to Zacharias and Elisabeth saying, "I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God." Now, all the angels, in one sense, stand in the divine presence; but not in this peculiar sense, as his prime minister. And Michael is said, in Da. 12:1, to be the prince that stood up for Daniel's people. And in the church's combat with the dragon, Re. 12:7, Michael and his angels are said to be his champions, and to have cast the dragon down to the earth. And in Zch. 3:9, it is said, "On one stone there are seven eyes;" that is, that these seven eyes or angels superintend the foundation which Zerubbabel laid for the temple. And so we may guess at the meaning of what Hanani the seer told king Asa, 9 Ch. 16:9—"The eyes of the Lord (i. e., these seven eyes) run to and fro through the whole earth, to show themselves strong in behalf of those whose hearts are perfect towards him." See Mede's Works, p. 43.

SILADOW. In determining the true significance of figures, it is necessary we should view the objects in the same light in which they appeared to the author who employed them. We must have an eye to the climate in which he lived, the prevailing customs and popular notions of the country, &c. In a cold country, a shade or shadow would scarcely be allowed to be a proper emblem of any thing that is desirable. But in Palestine and other hot countries, where the scorching heat was intolerable, nothing was more pleasant than a shade to protect from it. The first care of Jonah, when he waited in the plain near Nineveh, in order to be an eye-witness of the fate of that great city, was to prepare a booth, and sit under it in the shadow. The only comfort God sent him to allay his grief, was to make a gourd or shady plant to come up over Jonah, and that comfort was no sooner taken from him, than the sun beat upon his head that he fainted, and he wished in himself to die.

This image, which is taken from the life, may help us to account for the most vehement desires being compared to a laborer's longing for the shadow. Jb. 7:2.

Agreeably to the same notion, we find among the principal blessings promised in Christ's kingdom, Is. 4:6, a tabernacle for a shadow in the day-time from the heat.

Thus the general construction to be put upon the word shade, or shadow, is that of protection against some great evils, or security arising from such protection.

See Jud. 9:15; Job. 40:32. Ps. 17:8, 63:7, 91:1, and many others.

Sometimes the term shadow is used as the symbol of transitoriness. See 1 Ch. 29:15; Jb. 8:9, 11:2. Ps. 19:21, 141:4; Ex. 6:12.

Shadow of death, Jb. 3:5, 27:17, &c.; i. e., such a dismal darkness as that which reigns in the region of the dead.

SHEEP. Amongst tame animals, the sheep are most frequently mentioned in Scripture, having some properties which render them fit objects of comparison. Thus, in Ez. 31:31, they are the emblems of men. As sheep need a shepherd, so men in a civil state require a ruler, governor, or legislator. It is the same in the associated state as believers in Christ; no church or society could long subsist without pastors. Hence this is the most frequent name of that office in the New Testament; and Christ calls Himself by the same title. See Jn. ch. 10, Ac. ch. 20, 1 Pe. ch. 5, and many other passages.

As mildness and gentleness are the qualities of the sheep, so these are the characteristics of the Christian disciple, whose Master calls upon him to learn of Him, and to be meek and lowly in heart. Mat. 11:19.

Another circumstance of similarity may be noted, as observed by Vitringa, that sheep are nourished for slaughter; and so the primitive followers of the Lamb are described by one of themselves, in Ro. 8:36, applying to the apostles the words used by the Psalmist, in Ps. 41:22, the greater part of which psalm was truly descriptive of the sufferings they underwent in the early times of the gospel, when the martyrs were called to undergo with patience the most severe outrages of their unbelieving fellow-men, and to lay down their lives for the truth's sake.

The proneness of sheep to wander from the fold, is another particular to be observed, in which there is too great a resemblance—a resemblance acknowledged by an Old Testament saint, in Ps. 119:176,

"I have gone a trav'ly like a lost sheep;
Seek thy servant, for I do not forget thy commandments."

SHEPHERDS are sometimes put for rulers. See Na. 3:18,

"Thy shepherd slumber, O king of Assyria, Thy nobles dwell in sloth."

Here the parallelism is plain.

See also Jer. 12:10, and 23:34, to the end. Ez. 34:1, &c., where the negligence of the governors is pointed out as a cause of the incredulity of the people.

SHIELD. The symbol of defence and protection, and of the courage, or sense of security, derived thence.

It denotes, in a hieroglyphic sense,—

1. The princes or grandees of the earth, who, on account of their rank and elevation, are, or ought to be, the protectors of the people. Ps. 47:9. Ho. 4:18.

2. The spiritual arms of the faithful, fighting under their divine leader. Ps. 91:4. Tr. 30:5. E. 6:16.

3. God himself, who is often called a shield. Ge. 15:1; De. 33:29; Ps. 33: 287, 84:11; 119:14, and other places.

The materials of shields were anciently wood, covered with skins of beasts, and sometimes with plates of gold or brass. Some were made entirely of these materials. Those of Solomon were of massy gold. 1 K. 10:17. These were carried off by Shishak, king of Egypt, and Rehoboam made others of brass in their stead. 1 K. 14:27.

Virgil thus describes the shield of Mezenius, Aen. 10, v. 783,

"Tunc quis Æneas hastam jact, illa per orbem," &c.

i. e., "He darted his spear through the concave orb of triple brass, through the linen folds, and the complicated work with three half-hilts involved." Tacitus mentions golden shields in his Annals, b. 2; and Diomedes Siculus in his 20th book. Alexander the Great ordered the shields of his soldiers to be covered with silver, and hence they were called Argyraspides. Curtius, b. 4, c. 13; Justin, b. 12, c. 7.

The form of shields was various; triangular, oblong, but chiefly round. Homer describes them as round, and Virgil uses the phrase "sub orbis clypei teguntur." Some of them were sculptured, and contained the names of their generals, and even of their gods. Atheneus mentions the shield of Alcibiades as being made of ivory and gold, and having engraved on it, "Cupid." Demosthenes, at Platarch informs us, inscribed the name of "Good Fortune" on his.

The ancients were wont to anoint their shields, partly to affect the eyes of their enemies by their brightness, and partly to strengthen the hide with which they were covered. This custom is alluded to by Isaiah, 21:5, "Rise, O ye princes; anoint the shield." And some refer to this custom the expression in 2 S. 1:21, "The shield of Saul, as though it had been anointed with oil."

Sometimes the shield was reddened with the blood of enemies, to which Nahum alludes, 2:3. "The shield of his mighty men is made red;" though some suppose that shields were so dyed for the sake of distinction, just as soldiers wear different uniforms; and Tacitus de Mor. Germ. ch. 6, uses the phrase, "Seuta letestimis coloribus distinguunt." Those that were not reddened were accounted inglorious; thus Virgil, Aen. 9, v. 5, Silv.

"Parvum ingloris alba;"

but this may mean that he had no heroic device upon his escutcheon, never having distinguished himself by any valorous action. And Statius has, lib. 5, Silv.

"Nubigros clypeos, infactaque cedibus armis."

The use of shields was not merely for defence, but for ornament. They were wont to be crowded with them; to which some suppose Ps. 5:13 alludes—"Thou wilt crown him with thy favor as with a shield." As the word in the Hebrew is not magen, but tzitz, which signifies something punctate, Madge is disposed to render it "a fence of spears;" but Parkhurst has shown that it signifies a large kind of shield or target, and was so denominated because the middle part of it projected in a sharpish point, and this pointed protuberance was of great service to them, not only in repelling or glancing off missive weapons, but in bearing down their enemies; whence Martind has this allusion:

"In cum laevulis, cinctos undique repellit."

"In crowds his pointed bows will all repel."

In a note, he mentions that in Schenck's Physica Sacra, there are several representations of these pointed shields. In 1 K. 10:16, 17, the targets are plainly distinguished from the shields.

It was thought disgraceful to lose or throw away the shield; whence the Spartan mothers, in delivering a shield to their sons, when they went to battle, used to say, "My son, either this, or upon this;" meaning either preserve this, or bring it back upon it as on a bier. Ausonius has an epigram on this subject:

"Mater Lacena, clypeo dermann filium,

"Com hoc, impetu, aut in hoc redi."

Consequently, the shields were firmly held by the hand, that they might neither fall nor be snatched from them; and hence the phrase in Scripture of holding the shield, which we find in 2 Ch. 25:5, and Jer. 46:9.

Shields were wont to be suspended as trophies, either in temples, to the honor of God, or in private houses, for the perpetual remembrance of some remarkable victory. To this Virgil refers in Aeneas, b. 7, v. 183,

' Multaque, praeterea armis in postibus arata, &c.
Spiculae, clypeus, creuca rostra carina.'

Sartorius cites an epigram from Pausanias, which was added to a shield suspended in the temple of Minerva:

' Hos ibi Gallorum clypeos rex donat Iton! (i. e. Minerva)
Pyrrhus ab audita rapta tropae ade, &c.'

Vestiges of this custom we find in the sacred writings, when David took the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadarezer, and brought them to Jerusalem, and dedicated them to the Lord. 1 Ch. 18:7, compared with verse 11. Goliah's shield also, mentioned 1 S. 17:7, was probably so dedicated, since we find his sword deposited with Ahimelech the priest. 1 S. 21:9.

Sometimes shields, and other offensive and defensive armor, were burnt in honor of the supposed god of victory. Among the Romans, this act was an emblem of peace. Among God's people, it might show trust in Him as their defender. See allusions to this custom in Ps. 46:9, 'He burmeth the chariots in the fire.' What is here rendered chariots, is by the Septuagint and Vulgate rendered shields, and by the Chaldee round shields. See also Jos. 11:6. Na. 2:13. But see especially Ezekiel's description of the burning of the arms of the enemy, in consequence of the complete victory to be obtained over Gog and Magog. Ez. 39:8-10.

Ez. 26:8, 'and lift up the buckler against thee,' i. e. says Glassius, by a metonymy of the adjunct, 'He shall bring against thee soldiers, who use shields or bucklers.' But Michaelis interprets it, 'By forming the testudo,' i. e. a warlike engine, or fence made of boards, covered over with raw hides, under which, as a peacock, the besiegers of a town got up close to the walls.

Those who wish for further information respecting shields, may compare the Latin synonyms parma, pelta, umbo, clypeus, scutum, and the corresponding terms in Greek; as also the writers on the art of war among the ancients.

To be well armed, as Danubius observes, especially with defensive armor, gives courage, and confidence, and boldness, to attack or undertake any thing. Thus Horace, speaking of the boldness of him that first ventured to sea, says, that his breast was armed with triple brass; b. I, Ode 3.

In Jb. 41:15, the scales of leviathan, or the crocodile, are called his shields, in the Hebrew; or, as Durell renders it,

'The strength of bucklers is his pride.'

Sun up, or compacted, as with a close seal.

See in Parkhurst, under apok, a description of a crocodile eighteen feet and a half long, whose scales presented this appearance, being formed in parallel girdles, fifty-two in number, with protuberances in the middle, like the umbos or bosses of the ancient shields.

In Ps. 89:18, shield and king are synonymous:

'For Jehovah is our shield;
The Holy One of Israel is our King.'

implying, that rulers are properly the protectors of their people.

In Eschylus, Clytemnestra calls Agisthus her shield:

'Whil'st present to my aid Agisthus stands,
As he stand stod, guard on my social hearth,
He is my shield, my strength, my confidence.'

See Agamemnon, v. 1443, Potter's Pers.

SHIPS. Merchant ships signify the merchandise and treasure which they bring; and are, therefore, the symbols of profit.

In former times, the ways of trade were generally carried on by means of slaves; and therefore, in the oneirocrites, ships denote riches procured to a person by the labor of his slaves.

Islands, as has been shown, are standing and fixed places of commerce and riches; but ships are only transient, movable instruments to procure and bring them, and therefore ships denote movable riches and wealth.

The security of the righteous, in opposition to the disastrous fate of the wicked, is thus pictured out by Isaiah, 33:21,

'But the glorious name of Jehovah shall be unto us
A place of confluent streams, of broad rivers,
Which no varied ships shall pass,
Neither shall any mighty vessel go through.'

Of the enemies of God and his people, on the contrary, it is said, verse 23,

'They sail as loose, they cannot make them fast;
They may not firm, they cannot spread the ensign.'

'Then shall a copious spoil be divided,
Even the lame shall seize the prey.'

Is. 43:14, 'The Chaldeans exulting in their ships.' See Lowth, note in loc.

The glory and the increase of the church, by the conversion of the heathen nations, is thus represented by the same prophet, Is. 60:9,

'Verily the distant coasts shall await me,
And the ships of Tar-shish among the first,
To bring thy sons from afar,
Their silver and their gold with them.'

SICKLE. The symbol of destruction.

Jo. 3:13, 'Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe.'

The nations are here compared to ripened fruits, and the time of their destruction to the time of harvest, when men cut their corn and grapes.

The harvest is ripe; i. e. they are fit for destruction, as the ripened corn for reaping.

The wine press is full; i. e. their wickedness is come to its full measure.

The ravine overflowing; i. e. (as it immediately follows) their wickedness is great, or arisen to the greatest height.

And in this view Kimchi understands it, who says, it is a similitude to denote the effusion of blood, the time of their death being come, because great is the evil which they have done to Israel, they and their fathers.

Re. 14:14, 'Leaving in his hand a sharp sickle.' By this Daubuz understands the representative of the temporal power or powers who are to execute judgment on the territories of the corrupted church. But the expression 'like unto a Son of man,' seems to point to Christ himself, who strikes the blow, who has the chief hand in it, though angels also are sent to accompany him, and assist in the execution,— to show that this stroke of vengeance on Rome is with all the force of a divine hand.

For her grapes are fully ripe. This may well mean, that there is an appointed time when the judgment of God shall come on his enemies, as there is in the course of natural providence a time appointed for the season of harvest. The one shall as surely come in its appointed time as the other.

Amongst the ancients, the sickle was an emblem of acute discourse, as Nonnus has it, Xτιναν ον παγκρατιν δραγάσον λαλον ψόφην.

'Labis non artibus tollens falorem lequeam.'

With Euripides (in Hypsipyle), it is the symbol of death. With others, it was the symbol of punishment and execution. Thus Appian, in his Idaenities,

'Holding in his right hand a sharp sickle, to inflict punishment.'

See under HARVEST.

SILENCE metaphorically signifies any ceasing from action.

So the moon is said to be silent, when she is in conjunction, and gives no light. Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. 16, c. 39, and b. 18, c. 31.

On silence in war, is a cessation from acts of hostility. Livy, b. 37, c. 38.

And so, likewise, when the sun stood still at the prayer of Joshua, Jos. 10:12, 13, the sun, in the original, is said to be silent; i. e. not to perform his usual course. And thus, in Pliny, heaven is said to be silent when no wind is stirring. Pliny, Nat. Hist. b. 18, c. 28.

Silence, in the Auspicia, was when nothing foreign was observed, which might hinder the true observation of them; and therefore it was a solemn form, before any observation was made, for the augur to ask a proper person if there was silence. Tully de Divinit. b. 2.

During the sacrifices of the heathens, silence was required of all the worshippers, excepting the priests and clerics, who only spoke the words of their rituals. This was called Enōphuta and Στήηη, and the formula of the Romans was, Fasce linguis. Eurip. Iphig.

Hence, secretum silentium in Horace, b. 2, Od. 13; and Theophrastus reckons it as part of the character of a filthy fellow to speak when he is sacrificing; so that, if any one made any prayer in the mean time for particular favors to himself, he prayed secretly, from which some took the liberty, not being heard, to ask unreasonable things (Persius, Sat. 2, verse 7); on which account, to hinder such foolish and unreasonable prayers, Pythagoras commanded his disciples to speak aloud when they prayed.

As for the Jews, silence was observed in the temple during the offering of incense; at which time the people stood in the courts of the temple, and, falling upon their knees, prayed every man to himself; whereas, during the other parts of divine service, there was a great noise of musical instruments and trumpets. See 2 Ch. 29:25-28. Lu. 1:10. Upon this account silence before God, and a silent soul, may be symbols of praying.

Jer. 47:5, 'Ashkelon is put to silence.'

As shaving off of the hair and cutting of the flesh were marks of grief and mourning, Jer.

16:6, so silence is likewise expressive of great affliction. Thus Job's friends are said to have sat with him seven days and seven nights upon the ground, without addressing a word to him, because they saw his grief was very great. Jb. 2:13. And so the term is to be understood, Is. 15:1, 'Moab is brought to silence,' of Moab's being made speechless with grief and astonishment the night that her cities were spoiled.

Is. 38:10, 'In the silence of my days'; i. e. in my days or life being reduced to silence or inactivity, i. e. to death.

Jer. 51:55, 'destroyeth from out of her a great voice.'

When cities are populous, they are of course noisy. See Is. 22:2. Silence is therefore a mark of depopulation, and in this sense we are to understand God's destroying or taking away out of Babylon the great noise which, during the time of her prosperity, was constantly heard there,— 'the busy hum of men,' as the poet expressively calls it. In this manner the mystical Babylon is threatened, Re. 18:22, 23;

'And the voice of harpers, and musicians, and pipers, and trumpeters.'

'Sheb heard no more at all in them;
And the sound of a millstone;
Sheb heard no more at all in them;
And the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride;
Sheb heard no more at all in them.'

Very similar to what Jeremiah has in 7:34,

'And I will cause to cease from the cities of Judah,

From the streets of Jerusalem,

The voice of joy and the voice of mirth,

The voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride,

For the land shall become a desolation.'

See also Jer. 16:9, and 25:10.

Ps. 65:1, 'Praise is silent before thee, O God, in Zion'; i. e. submissively and quietly waiteth for Thee,— silence looking to receive mercies, and praise for their being received. The Chaldee paraphrases thus: 'The praise of the angels is counted as silence before Thee, O God, whose majesty is in Zion.'

The Hebrew term צְדֵקָה, zedek, implies forbearing to act as well as to speak, as in Jer. 8:14, where the prophet advises them to take no measures of resistance, as they would be ineffectually employed against what God had determined.

Re. 8:1, 'There was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour'; an allusion to the manner of the temple worship, where, while the priest offered incense in the holy place, the whole people prayed without, in silence, or privately to themselves. Lu. 1:10.

Supposed to refer to the tranquillity of the church and empire during Constantine's reign, from 323 to 337, or about 15 years; or, as some explain it, (see King's Mursels of Crit. vol. ii. p. 81, &c.) for 25 years, from 312 to 337. If this period could be precisely ascertained, the length of a prophetic half-hour being so many years, the prophetic hour and day would then be more accurately ascertained also. Thus, if the half-hour be 25 years, the whole hour is 50 years, and a great prophetic day will be 1200 years, though the more usual prophetic estimate is a day for a year.

SILVER. The holy oracles are compared to silver seven times purified, Ps. 12:6, and wisdom is preferred to it in several passages, as Jb. 28:15. Pr. 3:14-18, &c.

'The silver cord,' Ec. 12:6, is understood to mean the spinal marrow.

SLEEP. The emblem of death.

Sleep generally arises from labor and weariness, a long journey, and many toils. To persons who have undergone these, it is doubly needful and acceptable. Hence Solomon says, Ec. 5:12,

'The sleep of a laboring man is sweet,
Whether he eat little or much.'

So in Re. 14:13, the voice says,

'Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord,

That they may rest from their labors.'

The heathen writers have similar images

Thus Euripides in Orestes,

'Venerable night!

'O thou, who giv'st sweet sleep to man with toils

Exhalest ed., born on sable pillows, come.'

And an unknown author in Stoburus says,

'Sleep is not to be procured by couches adorned with ivory and gold, nor yet by purple tapestry, nor by precious robes and beds, but by works, by just labors, and the very necessity of nature.'

Sleep is called sweet, on account of its refreshing the weary limbs, and producing a cessation from ordinary toils. Thus Ovid, Metam. b. 11, c. 10,

'Somne, quies remum, placidissime somne Deorum

'Pax animi, quem cura fugit, qui corpora duris

'Fessas ministeria mulces, reparas labores.'

And Valerius Flaccus, Argon. b. 5,

'Nex hominum genus et durus mineralis labores,

'Retulerat fesso, opata silentio rebus.'

So death is described in Scripture as an end to toil. Thus, Jb. 3:17,

* There the wicked cease from troubling,
And there the weary are at rest.'

And Jn. 14:12,

* Till the heavens be no more, they shall not awake,
Nor be raised out of their sleep.'

Sleep also produces a remission from cares. Thus Philarus de Superstitiones — 'Even slaves forget the threats of their masters while asleep.' Sleep lightens the irons of the fettered, and mitigates inflammations, wounds, and pains.

So Jn. 3:18, 19,

* Then the prisoners rest together;
They hear not the voice of the oppressor;
The small and great are there,
And the servant is free from his master.'

Sleep not merely adds to the strength of the body, but reinvigorates the mind. Hence Meander calls it, 'the health of the body.' And Euripides makes Orestes say,

* O sleep, thou medicine, who reliest every disease,
How sweetly didst thou come to visit me;
Even in that hour when most thy help I needed;
Venerable oblivion of my misery, how art thou endued with wisdom!'

And Seneca, in his Hercules Juvens, act. 4,

* Detur quidem tempus, ut somno gravis
Vis vita mortis pectus oppressionem levet.

All will remember the remark of the disciples respecting Lazarus, Jn. 11:12, 'Lord, if he sleep, he shall do well.'

In like manner, death brings advantage to the faithful. 'To depart and to be with Christ,' says Paul, 'is far better'; to me to die is gain; while we are in this tabernacle, (the body,) we do groan, being burdened.

In sleep, all the senses are banished, and no longer perform their proper and usual functions. Hence Orpheus describes sleep as 'binding the frame with chains, though not of brass.' And Virgil, b. 10,

* A iron sleep o'erwhelms his swimming eyes.'

And Homer calls it, 'all-subduing sleep'; so death, or at least its forerunner, old age, is described by Solomon, Ec. ch. 12,

* The keepers of the house (the arms) tremble;
The strong men (the limbs) bow themselves;
The grinders (the teeth) cease because they are few;
Those that look out of the windows (the eyes) are darkened;
The daughters of music (the ears) are brought low;
The almond-tree (the gray hair) flourishes;
Because man goeth to his long home,
And the mourners go about the streets.'

As sleep is generally enjoyed in a bed, the grave also is called by that name. Is. 57:2, 'They shall rest in their beds.'

Sleep implies waking. So it is said of death, Da. 12:2, 'Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.'

Sleep is a divine bestowment. Ps. 127:2.

'Though the Guardian of Israel never slumbers nor sleeps,' Ps. 121:4, yet sleep is attributed to God, speaking of Him after the manner of men, as in Ps. 44:23, Is. 51:9, and similar passages; in all which is meant merely, a suspension or delay of divine help and interposition, according to that view of sleep, in which the active powers are suspended.

SMOKE, considered as hindering or obscuring the sight, may signify gross errors, which obscure and darken the understanding.

When considered as a thing of no substance, and that quickly disappears, it then signifies ambition, and the vain promises of courters.

When considered as proceeding from incense offered to God, it is the same as a cloud of covering or protection.

When considered as proceeding from firefly, it then signifies, according to the oneirocritics, diseases, anger, punishment, and war.

And agreeably to this, smoke is in Virgil explained of war, Aen. b. 7, v. 76, 81,

* Yet more, when fair Lavinia fed the fire,
Before the gods, and stood beside her sire,
(Straining to see) the smoke which invited in smoke
Of incense, from the sacred altar brooks,
Carries her dishevelled hair and rich attire,
Her crown and jewels crackled in the fire,
From whence the fuming train began to spread,
And lambent glories danced about her head.'

Dryden.

And in the sacred writings, smoke is for most part the adjunct of war and destruction. See Ge. 19:28, 'And he looked towards Sodom and Gomorrah, and toward all the land of the plain; and beheld, and lo, the smoke of the country went up as the smoke of a furnace.' Also Jos. 8:20, Jud. 20:40, Ps. 37:20; and Isaiah 14:31,

'From the north there cometh a smoke;' i. e., as Lowth observes, a cloud of dust raised by the march of Hezekiah's army against Philistia, which lay to the south-west from Jerusalem. A great dust raised, has at a distance the appearance of smoke: 'fumantes pulvere campi.' Virg. Aen. II, 908.

To which may be added those places where smoke is said to come out of God's nostrils, as in De. 20:20, 2 S. 22:9, Ps. 18:8, 74:1; for that is the same as his anger, according to the constant rule of the poets.

* Χολα ωρε περι καθηται.'

Thorac. Idyl. I. 18.

* Διασε, ειδικα ειναι καθηται.'

Persius, Sat. 5, 91.

* Παιανει μορα βιβειν in sumum concinu.'

Plaut. Amphit. Act. 4.

Hence Virgil,

* Promens volvit sub nubibus ignem.'

Georg. b. 3, v. 80.

And Martial,

* Fumentum nubium vix tentaveris Ursi.'

L. 6, Ep. 64.

In Pindar, smoke likewise signifies anger. He says, 'It is the lot of a good man to bring water against the smoke to them who quarrel; that is, to make peace when men fall out.' Nem. Od. 1.

A house filled with smoke, denotes punishment from persons in authority, or the supreme power. See the Oneirocritics, c. 160.

In Is. 4:5, smoke seems to be connected with images denoting defeat —

* Then shall Jehovah create upon the station of Mount Zion, And upon all her holy assemblies, A cloud by day, and smoke, And the brightness of a flaming fire by night, Yea, over all shall the glory (the Shechinah) be a covering;

A plain allusion to the pillar of cloud and fire in the wilderness. See Ex. 13:21, 40:38, and Zeli. 2:5.

* The smoking flax will He not quench? Is. 4:23; Mat. 12:20. Christ will deal tenderly with all who come to Him.

* A perpetually-ascending smoke; an emblem of future punishment. Re. 14:11, &c.

Re. 15:8, 'And the temple was filled with smoke from the glory of God, and from his power,' &c. In the judgment of Kordh, the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation, when he and his companions were swallowed up by the earth. Nu. 16:19, 42, 'And when the congregation murmured against Moses and Aaron, this appearance of the glory was the forerunner of judgment.' So that the smoke here is an emblem to express the execution of judgment.

SNOW. The symbol of purity.

Ps. 51:7,

* Wash me, I shall be whiter than the snow.'

La. 4:7,

* Her Nazaries were purer than snow.'

Ps. 68:14,

* When the Almighty scattered kings in it, It was white as snow in Salmon;

i. e., it was bright and cheering to the victorious party, the people of God. Jos. ch. 12, where the discomfiture of thirty-one kings is mentioned, may throw light on the passage, which is a very difficult one.

Snow being rare in Judea, it was much admired. Hence the son of Sirach speaks of it with a kind of rapture. Eccles. 43:18, 'The eye will be astonished at the beauty of its whiteness, and the heart transported at the raining of it.'

The Psalmist, 147:16, says, 'He sendeth forth snow like wool.' So Virgil, Georg. I. 397,

* Tenuis nee lane per calum vellera ferri;

And Martial, h. 4, Ep. 3, v. 1,

* Densus taciturno vellera aquorum.

Herodotus says, that 'the Scythians called the flakes of snow, πτερα, feathers, and that those parts which are situated to the northward of their territories, are neither visible nor practicable, by reason of the feathers that fall continually on all sides. For the earth is entirely covered, and the air so full of these feathers, that the sight is altogether obstructed.' L. 4, c. 7.

Pope, II. 3, line 284, mentions 'the fleeces of descending snows.'

In some countries, the snow falls in very large flakes.

Jer. 18:14, 'Will the snow leave Lebanon before any rock of the field?' i. e., as Blayney explains it, it would be very unnatural if the snow should quit the tops of Lebanon, whilst the rocks of less height in the adjacent country were covered with it. It is equally monstrous that people should desert their own God, and adopt the superstitions of a strange idolatry. But see Parkhurst on Sheleg, Heb. Lex. p. 700. Pr. 31:21,

* She is not afraid of the snow for her household,
For all her household are clothed with scarlet;

or rather, with double garments, which are a better protection against the cold than scarlet.

Snow, according to the Oriental interpreters, denotes poverty, cares, and torments, and sometimes fertility. And in Persia, as Tavernier says, they guess at the fruitfulness of the following year by the fall of the snow.

SONG. See the people of God so called, in Ex. 4:22, Ho. 11:1, and perhaps in Ez. 21:10.

SONG. Songs were generally used on occasions of triumph and thanksgiving; such as the song of Moses, at the deliverance from Pharaoh and his host, Ex. 15:1; the song of Israel at the well of Beer, Nu. 21:17; the song of Moses in De. ch. 32; that of Deborah, Jnd. 5:12; that of David on bringing up the ark, 1 Ch. 13:8; that of Hannah, 1 S. ch. 2; of the Virgin, Lu. 1:46; of the four-and-twenty elders, Re. 5:8; of Moses and the Lamb, Re. 15:3.

But a few, also, were sung on occasions of sorrow; such as that of David on Saul and Jonathan, 2 S. 1:18, &c.; the Lamentations of Jeremiah; and the song he composed on the death of Josiah, 2 Ch. 35:25.

It is said of Tyre, in Ez. 26:13, as one mark of her desolation,

* I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease,

* And the sound of thy harps shall be no more heard.'

Songs and viols were the usual accompaniments of sacrifices among the Jews and heathens. Am. 5:23,

* Sacrifici, dulces ultra effundit modos,
Et nixa magna violina ante aras cadat.'
Sense. Troad.

See Spencer de Leg. Hebr. 1105.

Ec. 12:3, 'And all the daughters of song shall be brought low,' i. e., all the organs which perceive and distinguish musical sounds, and those also which form and modulate the voice; age producing incapacity of enjoyment, as old Barzillai remarks, 2 S. 19:35. And as Juvenal notices, thus translated by Dryden,

* What music or enchanting voice can cheer

* A stupid, old, impudent ear?

Ps. 68:25 describes the manner of Jewish musical festivities:

* The singers went before,

* The players on instruments after;

* Among them were the Daniels playing with timbrels.'

In Ho. 2:15, singing implies the manifestation of the divine favor, where the Targum says, 'I will work miracles for them and perform great acts, as in the day when they ascended out of the land of Egypt.'

In this sense, a song denotes a great deliverance, and a new subject of thanksgiving. So a new song, as in Ps. 40:3; Re. 5:9; and elsewhere, implies a new work of salvation and favor, requiring an extraordinary return of gratitude and praise.

SORES, or ULCERS. The symbol of sores, or ulcers, is very analogous to the rites and guilt of the mind. For as the habit or clothing shows the quality and fortune of the person, so the affections of the body can be used only to denote those of the soul. The proximity of the clothing is thought to be sufficient to affect the body, and the close union of the body must certainly affect the soul.

A sore, therefore, signifies an uncleanness, a sin or vice, proportional to the properties of the sore. This is thus proved from holy writ:

1. In De. 28:35, an eating sore is said to be the punishment or curse for disobedience. And thus, as in the Hebrew style, the work is taken for the reward, and the reward or punishment for the work, the sore may represent the guilt. And hence Joly's friends, from the greatness of his sores, did agree about the greatness of his supposed sins, and taxed him accordingly.

2. A sore, leprosy, running sore, were the visible marks which not only drove a man from coming into the presence of God, but also forced him to go out of the camp and the society of men. And therefore a sore may very well symbolically represent, that those who are plagued with it, are driven away from the presence of God, and become abominable in his sight, and unfit for the society of Christians, which we know arises not from any bodily infirmity, but from the ulcers of the soul, the sins and wickedness of men.

3. Sores or ulcers symbolically signify sins, because, in the Hebrew phrase, to heal signifies to pardon sins, and to pardon the sin is equivalent to healing. Thus, in 2 Ch. 30:20, Hezekiah having prayed that God would pardon those who had eaten the pasover without being sufficiently purified, 'the Lord hearkened to Hezekiah, and healed the people.'

Thus, in Is. 53:5, 'by our Savior's stripes are we healed.'

And in Is. 1:6, wounds, bruises, and sores, are sins; the binding up of them signifies re-pentance, and the healing, remission.

Agreeably to this, Philo observes, that the leprosy is the symbol of the sins of the soul.

Upon the same principle that sores are sins, the leaves of a tree may be the symbol of remission of sins or divine pardon, and so of divine favor consequent thereupon. And this,

1. As leaves of plants are used medicinally to heal the sores and bruises of bodies.

2. As they have been used in religious purifications or expiations.

In the Mosaic law, there was one general kind of sacrifice commanded for purification, which consisted of a heifer sacrificed and burnt to ashes, with which and spring water, a leaf was made to serve many sorts of purifications. When this heifer was burnt, cedar and hyssop with scarlet wool were thrown into the burning, and when purgations were made with the water, a branch of hyssop was used to sprinkle it. Nu. 19:5, 18. Also, in the purgation of the leprosy. Le. 14:4, 6, 7. Hence in Ps. 51:9, 'Purge me with hyssop, and I shall be clean ;' which ceremonial rite is symbolic, and grounded upon the ablusive or purging virtue of the hyssop.

As for the pagans, they used herbs several ways in sacrifices and purgations—grass and branches, thus, or frankincense, myrtle, bay, and savin ; for which see Porphyry de Alestinentia, b. 2, § 5, and Pliny's Nat. Hist. b. 13, c. 1, and b. 15, c. 29. All which practices proceeded from the consideration of the natural virtues of such plants, which by analogy between the ulcers of the body and the sin of the soul, they applied in religious rites, as appears from Probus and Jamblichus.

3. Leaves serve for a covering, and so may be symbols of a propitiation. Sins, when grievous and ripe for punishment, are said to be before God ; what, therefore, covers them, makes a propitiation. On this score, the cloud of the incense, which covered the mercy-seat, when the high-priest went into the sanctuary, is said to prevent his death. Le. 16:13. God would have kind of veil to stand before the high-priest, that he might not, as it were, see God face to face, which was a privilege only granted to Moses. So in Ps. 32:1, 'Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered.' And in Ps. 85:2, 'Thou hast forgiven the iniquity of thy people, Thou hast covered all their sin ;' where pardon and covering explain each other.

Farther, sia is nakedness in the style of Scripture, and the consequence of it is shame. Thus in Ex. 32:15, when the people had committed idolatry, Moses saw that the people were naked, for Aaron had made them naked. So in 2 Ch. 28:19, 'For he made Judah naked, and transgressed sore against the Lord.' What, therefore, covers man, takes off or at least lessens his shame. When, therefore, Adam had sinned, he endeavoured to palliate his shame by covering his body with leaves or boughs. But God, who was merciful, though He cursed him in some things, yet favored him in others ; and upon his confession, which was a token of repentance, He clothed him. It is probable that God instructed him to offer up some victims for his sin, and thereupon commanded him to clothe himself with the skins.

SOW. An unclean animal ; the symbol of impurity. 2 Pe. 2:22.

It was held in great abomination among the Jews, so that their enemies, such as Antiochus Epiphanes, wishing to affront them, introduced swine among them.

Our Lord, in Mat. 7:6, sees, under the name of swine, to have had a certain description of characters in view. Men devoted to sensuality, were disposed to reject the self-denying precepts of the gospel.

SPITTING. Mat. 25:61, 'Then did they spit in his face ;' predicted by our Lord Himself, which showed that He laid stress on that part of his ignominious usage, in Lu. 18:32, 'He shall be spitefully treated, and spitted on ;' predicted long before by the prophet Isaiah, speaking in the person of the Messiah, Is. 50:6, 'My face I hid not from shame and spitting ;' an instance, as Lowth observes, of the utmost contempt and detestation.

It was ordered by the law of Moses, in a certain case (see De. 25:9), as a severe punishment, carrying with it a lasting disgrace.

Among the Medes it was highly offensive to spit in any one's presence. Herod. i. 99. And so likewise among the Persians. Xenoph. i. p. 18.

Job makes it a complaint in his affliction, 30:10, 'They abhor me ; they flee far from me ;

'They forbear not to spit in my face.'

And Jehovah said unto Moses, 'If her father had but spit in her face, should she not be a-brunred seven days ?' Nu. 12:14 ; on which place Chardin remarks, that 'spitting before or spitting upon the ground, in speaking of any one's action, is through the East an expression of extreme detestation.'

If spitting in a person's presence was such an indignity, how much more spitting in his face !

It was a mark of thorough contumely. Petronius, Satyr. p. 51, says, 'familiisque sordidissimam partem ac me corporis iunctum.' And a little after he says, 'verberibus spatisque extra janum ejus.' And so Seneca de Const. Cap. cap. 1, 'A restris usque ad arcum Fabianum per seditionis factionis manus tractus, voces improbas et spatis, et omnes alias insane multitudinis contumelias pertulisset.' And Dio. b. 4, says, 'But Fulvia, taking the head, threw it down with bitter words and spitting.' And the Christians in the East were wont to spit on the idols of the Gentiles, as a mark of hatred and contempt. So Gregory Abulfarag, in his Hist. Dynast., writes, p. 265, 'Tiphuratus, a Christian scribe, was hostile to Honaius, and they met at one time in the house of a certain Christian in the city of Bagdad, and there was an image of Christ and his disciples, and a lamp burning before the image. And Honaius said to the master of the house, "Why do you waste the oil ? This is not Christ nor his disciples, but an image." And Tiphuratus said, if they are not worthy of veneration, spit upon them ; and he did spit.'

There is a passage in Seneca which shows that spitting was an indignity offered to men condemned to punishment. Thus—'Aristides was led from Athens to punishment, and every one who met him cast down his eyes and ground ; not as if animadverting on this just man, but as if he found fault with justice itself. Yet there was one person found who spat in his face.'

When the ancients happened to meet an insane person, or an epileptic, it was customary to spit at them. See Theophrastus, Characters, cap. 17 ; Pliny, lib. 28, cap. 4.

STAFF. The staff of bread, on which men lean for support. Le. 26:26. Ez. 4:16, &c.

Thus Lucretius,

'Et quoniam non est quasi quod sufficiat arsis,

Defale fit corpus, hancquunt omnia membra,

Brachia palpebra cadunt, popliteque procumbunt.'

Z. 4, v. 948.

No. 4:12,

'My people ask counsel at their stocks,

'And their staff declareth to them.'

This refers to the divination by rods or staves, which was anciently practised in the East. On one staff was written, God bids ; on the other, God forbids. See Pococke ; and under Arrow.

STAR. Stars are symbols of persons in eminent station, and very fitly so, from the height of their own position. Thus, the Star out of Jacob, Nu. 24:17, is coupled with, or explained by, the Scopre out of Israel. In Ge. 37:9, Joseph's brethren are described as eleven stars, their subsequent renown as patriarchs justifying the appellation. In Nu. 24:17, just quoted, where the Hebrew and Greek have a star, the Chaldee expounds it—'A king shall arise out of the house of Jacob,' which interpreters apply first to David, and afterwards to the Messiah. In allusion to this prophecy, that infamous Jewish impostor Bar-cocab, or, as the Romans called him, Barchoebas, who appeared in the reign of Adrian, assumed this pompous title, 'Son of a Star,' as the name implies, as if he were the Star out of Jacob ; but this false Messiah was destroyed by the emperor's general, Julius Severus, with an almost incredible number of his deluded followers.

Stars were the symbols of a deity—'the star of your god Chinni.' Am. 5:26. Probably the figure of a star was fixed on the head of the image of a false god. A Greek scholiast on the place says, 'Erat simulacrum Meathitarum cum gemma pellucida et extrema in summa fronte ad figuram Luciferi.' Chinni was a name for Saturn, as Spencer affirms.

Plutarch, de Isid. et Osir., tells us, the Egyptian priests affirm of their tutelary deities, not only of those that are immortal, but likewise of their deified heroes, that 'their souls illuminate the stars in heaven.' A star, therefore, was often used, in the Egyptian hieroglyphics, as a symbol of their men-gods. This, as well as rays of light, was their common insignia all over the world. Lucan, 7, v. 458,

'Famulos manus, radiis ornabit et astris.'

We are told the same by Suetonius, in his Life of Julius Caesar : 'In deorum numerum (Caesar) relatus est,' &c. ; i. e. 'he was ranked among the gods' not only by the words of a decree, but in the real persuasion of the vulgar. For during the games, which his heir Augustus gave in honor of his memory, a comet blazed for seven days together, rising always about eleven o'clock. It was supposed to be the soul of Caesar, now received into heaven ; and for this reason a star was added to the crown of his statue.'

When Joseph said, Ge. 37:9, 'I have dreamed a dream, and behold, the sun and the moon and the eleven stars made obeisance to me,' his father, understanding his words in their symbolical and true meaning, rebuked him, and said to him, 'Shall I and thy mother and thy brethren indeed bow down ourselves to thee ?' But as the heavenly bodies, mentioned by Joseph, could not appear, even in a dream, as making obeisance to him, we may believe that he saw in his dream, not the heavenly bodies, but a visionary representation of his parents and brethren making obeisance to him ; and that, in relating this to his father, he chose, from modesty, to express it in symbolical, rather than in plain language. Besides, as there never was any collection of stars called the eleven stars, the application which Jacob made of that appellation to Joseph's eleven brethren, shows clearly that the word star, in common speech, was used to signify the father of a tribe. Marchnight, vol. iii. p. 436.

In Da. 8:10, the stars seem to denote the princes and nobles of a kingdom, who were thrown down and stamped upon by the power, designated by the 'little horn.' Stellarum nomine (says Glassius, p. 780) viri illustris et praecipui intelligentur, qui administratione suu in ecclesia et republica alius pro luxurient.'

In Re. 8:10,11, a star is said to fall from heaven, by which, in all probability, some king is to be understood as rebelling against another power. This star is called Borborus, on account of its bitter consequences. Danubius supposes this star to mean Attila, king of the Huns, who, in A. D. 442, had waste several provinces of the Roman empire.

In Re. 8:11, 'I saw a star fall from heaven to the earth ;' i. e. an inferior power revolving against a superior, and this in order to his own aggrandizement. Danubius affirms this to be Mahomet, who, in 622, began to take the sword in behalf of his own imposture, and became successful. Bishop Newton gives the same interpretation.

Re. 22:8, 'I will give him the morning-star ;' i. e. I will bestow on him preminence.

Jb. 38:7,

'When the morning stars sang together,'

'And all the sons of God shouted for joy.'

Perhaps this may refer to an opinion that the stars are under the direction of guardian angels. But why the morning stars? Because it was at the time of the creation, the morning of the first day.

Re. 1:20, the pastors of the seven churches are called the seven stars, on account of their office.

Jude, verse 13, the false teachers are described as 'wandering stars,' in allusion to those meteors arising from electrical matter in the air, which blaze and are in motion for a time, but are suddenly extinguished.

Re. 6:13, 'The stars of heaven fell upon the earth ;' i. e. some principal ruling powers fell from their authority into a state of subjection.

Bishop Newton considers this to signify the downfall of the pagan Roman empire, when the great lights of the heathen world, the sun, moon, and stars, the powers civil and ecclesiastical, were all eclipsed and obscured, the heathen emperors and Caesars were slain, the heathen priests and augurs were extirpated, the heathen officers and magistrates were removed, and their revenues were appropriated to better uses.

Re. 12:4, 'his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven ;' i. e. the power here alluded to, would subdue the governments in the third part of the then known world. Here, as Danubius observes, the deorum of the symbol is followed ; crocodiles, and some great serpents, seizing their prey with their tails.

STING is equivalent to the poison it contains, and transmits into the wound it makes.

In Scripture, poison, lies, error, delusion, curse, gall, and mischief, are synonymous ; the former being the causes of the latter.

So in Ps. 140:3, 'Alders' poison is under their lips,' is to be explained by lies or curse ; as in Ps. 58:3,4, 'They go astray as soon as they be born, speaking lies.' Their poison is like the poison of a serpent : they are like the deaf adder, that stoppeth their ear.' And in Ps. 145:15, 'With their tongues have they deceived ; the poison of asps is under their lips ; their mouth is full of cursing and bitterness.' For the sting of the scorpion, see under Scorpion.

STONES. (White Stone.) The most ancient way among the Greeks of giving sentence in courts of judicature, was by black and white pebbles, called λίθοι. They who were for acquitting a person tried, cast into an urn a white pebble, and those who were for condemning him a black one. Ovid has noticed this custom, Met. b. 15, v. 41,

'Mos erat antiquus, nivis strigere lapilli,
His dannare reos, illis absolvere culpam.'

'Black and white stones were used in ages past ;
These to acquit the prisoner, those to cast.'

The like was done in popular elections ; the white pebbles being given by way of approbation, and the black ones by way of rejection. The ballot of the present day is something similar.

Hence a white pebble or stone becomes a symbol of absolution in judgment, and of conferring honors and rewards. Re. 9:27.

The symbol of a stone cut out of a mountain without hands is used in Da. 2:34, and may be thus explained :

A mountain has been shown to signify sym-bically a kingdom or empire. Now, a mountain consists of stones united together. By the rule of analogy, stones, therefore, must signify the several peoples of which a kingdom or empire, represented by a mountain, is composed. And, therefore, a stone cut out of a symbolical mountain will be a people to be formed out of the kingdom represented, and to be (forasmuch as the cutting denotes a separation) of a quite different nature from the rest of the people, of which the said kingdom consists. And this is said to be done without hands, which may denote that the said people would be of a sudden formed, when men were not aware of any such thing; and that it would be done without any visible worldly support or assistance.

Zech. 9:16,

And Jehovah their God shall save them;
In that day shall He save his people as sheep,
When consecrated voices shall be created for a standard
in his land;

a reference to heaps of stones, set up by way of memorial, and consecrated to that particular use; i. e. as monuments of victory. See 1 S. 7:12, "Then Samuel took a stone, and set it between Mizpeh and Shen, and called the name of it Eben-ezer, saying, Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." Ebezer signifies the stone of help. See also 2 S. 20:8; and Virgil, Geo. gic. b. 3,

"Stabunt et Parli lapides spacio signa."

Strabo, Geogr. b. 3, mentions, that "it was customary amongst the ancients to mark the limits of their victorious progress by altars or columns of stone." And Xenophon, Anabasis, b. 4, records, that "an immense pile of stones was erected by the Greeks, on their return from the expedition to Asia."

Stones of this kind were wont to be consecrated by pouring oil upon them. See Ge. 28:18. They were also crowned with garlands; but of this there is no mention in Scripture.

STORK. A well-known bird, remarked for its natural affection, and for other qualities. It is a bird of passage.

It is mentioned in several passages of Scripture; among others, in Jer. 8:7,

Even the stork in the heavens knoweth her stated times,
And the lark-love, and the crane, and the swallow, observe the season of their coming;
But my people have not discerned the judgment of Jehovah."

"In the end of autumn," says a Danish author, "the storks, not being able to bear the winter of Denmark, gather in a great body about the sea coasts, as we see swallows do, and go off to the south; the old ones leading, the young brood in the centre, and a second body of old ones behind. They return in spring, and betake themselves in families to their several nests."

It is this quality of foresight and anticipation of the seasons, of which the sacred writer makes the stork the symbol, and which he employs as a ground of reproach against the Jews; in the same manner as our Lord reproaches the Pharisees (Mat. ch. 12) with being able to discern the face of the sky, but not to discriminate the signs of the times.

As these birds shun the winter instinctively, so the people of God, when they see the coming of divine judgments, should make preparation to escape from them, by repentance or otherwise.

And as these birds return in spring to their former abodes, so God's people ought to distinguish the times and periods which He has fixed for the duration of His judgments.

It is the wish of God that his people should be so employed; and it is their interest and duty not to be indifferent spectators of the signs of the times, that they may escape the visitations which impend over others.

SUN. Suns, Moon, and Stars. Wherever the scene of government is laid, whether in the civil or ecclesiastical state, or in that of a single family, the sun, moon, and stars, when mentioned together, denote the different degrees of power or governors in the same state.

This is evident, in relation to a single family, from Joseph's dream, Ge. 37:10, where the sun, moon, and stars, are interpreted, of Jacob, the head of his family; of his wife; the next head of guide; and of his sons, the lesser ones.

And as to a kingdom, the Oriental oneirocritics, ch. 167, jointly say, that the sun is the symbol of the king, and the moon of the next to him in power. And therefore the stars, when mentioned together with the sun and moon, must denote governors or rulers of an inferior kind, but next in power to him who is the second person in the government.

And therefore the stars, in the symbolical character, which, taken from the appearance of things, and their proportion, being to the eye lesser luminaries, signify, according to the interpreters, inferior princes or governors.

And thus Hippolytus, prince of Athens, is called a star by Euripides. Hippol. v. 1120.

When a king is not compared with his own nobles or princes, but with other kings, a star may be his symbol. Thus, in Is. 14:17, the king of Babylon is represented by the morning-star. For, as it is brighter than the rest of the stars, and is the forerunner of the sun, and so shows a power preceding in time the rest of the light, so the king of Babylon was greater in power and dignity than other kings, and the monarchy established in Babylon was the first that was established in the world.

A setting sun is the symbol of a declining and perishing power; a rising sun, of a rising power or government.

Whatever comes from the rising of the sun betokens some fortunate accident, according to Artemidorus, b. 3, c. 36. It is a good and prosperous omen, and betokens assistance.

Thus, in 2 S. 23:4, the favor and protection of God to his people is compared to the light of the morning when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds.

For us, in Ho. 6:5, light is the symbol of God's government, so the dawning of it, in the rising of the sun, is the beginning of his favor and deliverance, which is to go forwards to greater perfection.

Hence Solomon says, Pr. 4:18, "The path of the just is as the shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day." And again, 20:27, "The lamp or light of Jehovah is the breath of man;" i. e. the favor of God keeps men alive, makes them active, vigorous, and prosperous.

In Is. 58:8, it is said,

"Then shall thy light break forth as the morning;
And thine health shall spring forth speedily."

The health implies forgiveness of sins, and the light of the morning, a deliverer. That is, God will send a Deliverer, and forgive the sins of his people, or remit the punishment.

So also in Is. 60:1, 2,

"Arise, shine, for thy light is come,
And the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee," &c.

The Light or Deliverer here is the Messiah, who, to the church of Israel, is the Aiora, the day spring, east, or sun-rising, as well as the light of the world, Zech. 3:8. Ma. 4:2. Jn. 1:1, &c., and is therefore called the Sun of righteousness.

All which agrees with the words of Zacharias, Luke 1:78, 79, "Whereby the day-spring, Aiora, from on high hath visited us, to give light to them that sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, to guide our feet into the way of peace." For the words, "to sit in darkness and in the shadow of death," signify, to be in slavery and subjection; in allusion to an Eastern custom still in practice, of putting the slaves in prisons, or pits under ground, where they are locked up every night. And sometimes they were blinded, as appears from Jud. 16:21, and from the custom of the Scythians, related by Herodotus, b. 4, § 2. Those that were designed for work elsewhere, were every morning taken out of the dungeon, and sent to their labor.

Now, as the day spring delivers them from that place, at least for a time, so it is a proper symbol of release from slavery, according to the subject spoken of. Thus in Is. 42:6, 7,

"I will give thee for a covenant to the people,

For a light in the nation,

To open the eyes of the blind,

To bring the captive out of confinement,

And those that dwell in darkness from the dungeon."

See to the same purpose Is. 49:9. And thus also it is said, Ps. 49:13, "The upright shall have dominion over them in the morning;" that is, when God comes to judge the cause of the upright, that have been in oppression, and set them at liberty, then shall the upright in their turn subdue the wicked.

And there is this further conformity of the expression to the nature of the thing, that justice was executed, and causes tried in courts in the morning, as appears from Jer. 23:12; so that the morning is the proper time of jail delivery, and courts of justice met then,—the places in which slaves were either delivered to their masters by sentence for payment, or else set at liberty, such causes being there managed; as is evident from Ex. 21:6.

So Tyndarus, in Plautus, being taken out of the quarry pits, says, "Lucis das tunc: copiam, — sc. release me from my slavery." Capt. act. 5, sc. 4, v. 11.

God Himself is called a sun, Ps. 81:12.

And Jesus Christ calls Himself the light of the world; i. e. the sun of the world, Jn. 8:12.

Deborah, in her song, makes the sun the symbol of believers in God: "Let them that love Him be as the sun when he goeth forth in his might." Jud. 5:31.

The sun may be considered to be an emblem of divine truth, respecting which the apostle says, Ep. 5:13, "But all things that are revealed are made manifest by the light, for light is that which doth make things manifest." As light is not only manifest in itself, but makes other things manifest, so one truth detects, and reveals, and manifests another, as all truths are dependent on, and connected with each other, more or less.

As the sun is the supreme material light, so when he rises all other lights disappear; so when God teaches, whether by reason or by revelation, all other teaching appears valueless, and every other monitor seems silent, that the voice of God alone may be heard.

As it is the same sun that illuminates all parts of the earth, so whatever nations throughout the whole habitable globe are instructed by God, it is the same truth by which they are instructed; for God does not teach differently in different places. Truth is no geographical thing, affected by latitudes, climates, or the like.

As the light of the sun is one, pure, and unstained, for the spots we seek to discover on his disk, are probably not on, but collected around the sun; so it is said of God, 1 Jn. 1:5, "God is light, and in Him is no darkness at all;" i. e. He is exempt from all error, deceit, injustice, imperfection, and all light derived to the creatures, proceeds solely from Him.

The light of the sun was considered anciently to have a sanative and vivifying power; and Macrobius mentions (Saturn. 1, cap. 17) when treating of Apollo, that the vestal virgins were wont to address him in this manner—O Apollo Medicus—O Apollo the physician; and we find Jesus spoken of as the Sun of righteousness, with healing in his wings; i. e. in his beams. And hence John says, "In Him was life, and the life was the light of men." 1:4.

Amongst the ancients, the sun was considered to be the symbol of a king. So Gordian, Hadrian, Aurelian, are represented on coins under the figure of the sun, with the inscription—Oriens. Aug. sive soli invicto, Soli invicti Comitum, &c.

In the Jewish writings we often find this title applied to the Messiah. Thus in Rabbith. fol. 143, "They said unto him, No, unless when the sun shall come, i. e. the Messiah, as it is written, And to you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise." And Rashi on Is. 24:15, where he says, "Jonathan interprets it, when light shall come to the just:—this is said of the two lights of deliverance from Babylonish and Roman captivity; i. e. the Messiah, whom they feigned to themselves to be such a deliverer."

SWORD. The symbol of war and slaughter, as appears from numerous passages of Scripture, especially in the prophetic books. See Is. 34:5. Ez. ch. 21, &c. Re. 19:17, 18.

Le. 26:25, "I will bring a sword upon you;" i. e. I will cause war to come.

Ge. 27:40, "By thy sword thou shalt live;" i. e. thou shalt support thyself by war and rapine.

It is the symbol of the divine judgments. See De. 32:41, &c.

Also, of the instrument whom God employs to execute his judgments. Ps. 17:13, "The wicked, who is thy sword?"

It is the symbol of power and authority. Ro. 13:4, "He beareth not the sword in vain."

This is spoken agreeably to the notions and customs of the Romans at the time when the apostle wrote. Thus, not more than ten or twelve years after the date of this Epistle, Vitellius, when he resigned the empire, gave up his dagger, which he had taken from his side, to the attending consul, thus surrendering the authority of life and death over the citizens. See Tacitus, b. 3, c. 68, and Suetonius in Vitell. cap. 15.

So the kings of Great Britain are not only, at their inauguration, solemnly girt with the sword of state, but this is afterwards carried before them on public occasions.

It is the symbol of unjust violence. Mat. 26:52, "All they that take the sword shall perish by the sword."

Our Lord uses it in opposition to peace; Mat. 10:34, "I came not to send peace on earth, but a sword;" which Luke, 12:51, expresses by the word division: i. e. men would so abuse his doctrine, as to make it the occasion of violent contentions; but as to its proper design and natural tendency, the angels proclaimed it at his appearance in the flesh, that it was to send peace on earth."

The Egyptians, those great masters of symbolical learning, called Ochus, king of Persia, a cruel conqueror to them, by the name of sword. See Plut. de Isid. et Osir. p. 394, quoted by Daubuz.

In many authors, the sword is the symbol of death or destruction. Thus Euripides says, Helen, v. 809,

'The sword shall reach thee, not my nuptial bed.'

5. The word of God is often in Scripture compared to a sword; as by Paul in Ep. 6:17, 'And the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God'; i.e. the spiritual sword of God's word, the knowledge of which not only separates them from evil affections, but teaches them to discern between truth and falsehood; guards the Christian from the influence of corrupt and destructive doctrines, and destroys the influence and force of the most artful and delusive errors.

So in He. 4:12, 'The word of God is quick and powerful, (or living and energetic,) sharper than any two-edged sword.' And in Ho. 6:5, the word of God is said to destroy all his enemies:

'Therefore have I hewn them by the prophets;
I have slain them by the words of my mouth;
And my judgments have been as the light when it goeth forth.'

On which passage see Newcome's notes.

See also Is. 49:2, and Lowth's excellent note there, in which, inter alia, he remarks, 'The metaphor of the sword and the arrow, applied to powerful speech, is bold, yet just; it is said of Pericles by Aristophanes,

'His powerful speech
Pierced the heart's soul, and left behind,
Deep in his bosom its keen point infix'd.'

Pindar is particularly fond of this metaphor, and applies it frequently to his own poetry. See Olymp. 2, 160 and 149, and Olymp. 9, 17, where he calls his verses sharts, to denote their acute and apposite application.

So, in Ac. 2:37, the words of Peter are said to have 'perced the hearts of his hearers.'

Jer. 47:6, 'Ho, sword of Jehovah,' &c. The Babylonish monarch seems to be addressed by this title, as the Assyrian was by that of 'the rod of God's anger' Is. 10:5; such conquerors being the appointed executioners of the divine judgments. Compare Ez. 14:17, and 21:3, &c.

In the vision related by John, Re. 1:16, of one like unto the Son of man, it is said, 'out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword,' in conformity to Isaiah's expression already referred to, Is. 49:2, 'He hath made my mouth like a sharp sword;' a character belonging exclusively to Him who is Himself 'the Word of God.'

T.

TABERNACLE. The tabernacle, among the Jews, was the symbol of God's presence, and consequently of his protection, and of his church, to whom that protection was vouchsafed. So that it prefigured the Christian church as in favor with God, and under his protection, but in an unsettled condition. Ac. 7:44. He. 8:5. 9:24.

The tabernacle of the Jews, on account of the Shechinah dwelling in it, was a type of the body of Christ, in whom dwelt all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, and who was therefore on earth the tabernacle of God with men.

See TEMPLE.

Tabernacle is also used to denote the human body, which, though the residence of an immortal spirit, is constituted of frail and slight materials, and is shortly to be by death taken down and dissolved. 2 Co. 5:1,4. Wisd. 9:15.

Amos has a remarkable passage, quoted in Ac. 15:16,

'In that day I will raise up the fallen tabernacle of David, And I will close up the breaches thereof; And I will raise up its ruins, And I will build it as in the days of old; That the residue of men may seek Jehovah, And all the heathen over whom my name is called, Shall Jehovah, who doth this.' Am. 9:11,12.

By the tabernacle of David, he elegantly expresses the kingdom or real dignity of David in the person of the Messiah ruling over the church.

The mansion of the sun in heaven is called by the Psalmist a tabernacle. Ps. 19:4.

TAIL. Tail, in holy writ, used symbolically to signify two things which meet frequently both together in one subject, the one being the cause of the other.

It signifies subjection or oppression under tyranny. So this symbol is used and explained by God Himself in He. 2:13, where He promises blessings to the obedient: 'And the Lord shall make thee the head and not the tail, and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath.'

And thus, in the Oriental oneirocritics, the tail of a beast, as being the part that follows or comes behind, signifies the retinue, honor, dignity, and riches, of the subject concerned; Job. 23:23, 236.

2. The other signification of tail is, when it

SYMBOL. DICTIONARY.

TEM

signifies a false prophet, impostor, or deceiver, who infuses the poison of his doctrine, which brings on a curse, as the scorpion doth with his tail.

Thus in Is. 9:14,15, 'The Lord will cut off from Israel head and tail, branch and rush, in one day. The ancient and honorable he is the head, and the prophet that teacheth lies he is the tail.' So again, Is. 19:15, 'Neither shall there be any work for Egypt, which the head or tail, branch or rush may do; that is, neither the power of the princes, nor the devices of the false prophets and enchanters shall avail anything.'

By this may be explained the symbolical meaning of that great miracle exhibited to Moses of the serpent transformed out of his staff, and into it again; which was to assure him of his power to overcome the Egyptians. The staff was thrown upon the earth and turned into a serpent, at which Moses was frightened, to show what terror he and the Israelites were in at the sight of Pharaoh, the great Egyptian dragon. He is ordered to take it by the tail, and it was turned into a staff, to show that he would overcome the tail of the serpent, the false prophets, and retinue of Pharaoh, and by that victory get into his power a sceptre or authority to govern the Israelites. Ex. 3:3,4.

To the same purpose was the second miracle wrought in consequence of that, when the rod of Moses, turned into a serpent, Ex. 7:9,12, swallowed up those of the magicians; for that plainly showed and signified the power of Moses to overcome the magicians in their enchantments, and to rescue Israel out of their hands.

TEARS. Is. 25:8, 'And the Lord Jehovah shall wipe away the tear from off all faces.'

Re. 7:17, 'And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.'

See also Re. 21:4.

Tears are the well-known emblems and usual accompaniments of grief; and as grief is generally most violent when it is indulged for the dead, so here, in two of the above passages, the wiping away of tears is connected with the abolition of death.

Is. 25:8, 'He shall utterly destroy death forever.'

Re. 21:4, 'And there shall be no more death.'

Tears are wont to be poured out on occasions of mortality. Thus:

Jer. 31:13,

* A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation and bitter weeping,

Rachel, weeping for her children,
Refused to be comforted for her children,
Because they were not.'

Jer. 22:10,

* Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him,
But weep sore for him that goeth away,
For he shall return no more, nor see his native country.'

Tears are sometimes shed for national calamities. Thus:

La. 4:2,

* She weepeth sore in the night,
And her tears are on her cheeks.'

Nu. 14:1,

(* And all the congregation lifted up their voice and cried,
And the people wept that night.)

Tears are sometimes the offspring of painful suspense and anxiety. Thus Cicero, Ep. b. 14, Ep. 3, 'Accepte ab Aristocrate tres epistolae, quas ego lacrymatis prope ducvi. Confer coenit morore, mea Terentia.'

And Ovid has —

* Est quidam fiera volupta,
Explora lacrymas egitorque dolor.'

And David, Ps. 42:4,

* My tears have been my meat day and night,
While they continually say to me, Where is thy God?'

And Ps. 80:5,

* Then feedest them with the bread of tears,
And givest them tears to drink in great abundance.'

Ps. 102:9,

* For I have eaten ashes like bread,
And mingled my drink with weeping.'

And Hagar's pitiable case is thus described in Ge. 16:15,16, 'And the water was spent in the bottle, and she cast the child under one of the shrubs. And she went and sat her down over against him a good way off; as it were a how-shot; for she said, Let me not see the death of the child. And she sat over against him, and lifted up her voice and wept.'

A Greek poet in the Anthology thus bewails his condition:

* Δακρυστας γενομην, και δακνωσας αποθυηκω,
κ. τ. λ.

which may be thus rendered in Latin:

* Lacrymum sum natus et lacrymans morior,
In lacrymis universum comperti vitam.

O genus hominum lacrymorum, debile, miserable,

Tracum in tenebris solutumque.'

Tears are often the symbol of divine judgments, as they are sometimes also of human oppressions. Ec. 4:1. Ac. 20:19. Jer. 14:17.

They are sometimes the fruit of repentance and contrition. See He. 12:17. Mat. 26:75.

And commonly the result of natural affection, depicting a beloved object, of which the examples are too obvious and numerous to relate. There is a singular inscription in Aringhi's Roman Subterr. cap. 20 — 'Tempore Adriani Imperatoris, Marius adolescentes dum militum qui satis vivit, dum vita pro Christo cum sanguine consumunt, in pace tandem quievit. Bene merentes cum lacrymis et mite posuerunt.'

Whatever the causes of tears to the righteous, all these shall be abolished, which is what is meant by 'God's wiping away all tears from their eyes.' For death, oppression, calamity, and misery, shall have no place in the heavenly region. Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. Those who sow in tears shall reap in joy.

TEETH are frequently used in Scripture as the symbols of cruelty, or of a devouring enemy.

Thus, in Pr. 30:14, 'There is a generation whose teeth are as swords, and their jaw-teeth as knives, to devour the poor from off the earth, and the needy from among men.'

So David, to express the cruelty of tyrants, Ps. 50:19, prays to God 'to break out the great teeth of the young lions.'

So God, threatening the Israelites for rebellion, De. 32:24, says, 'I will also send the teeth of beasts upon them.'

And David, Ps. 57:1, compares the teeth of wicked men to spears and arrows. 'My soul,' saith he, 'is among lions, and I lie even among them that are set on fire, whose teeth are spears and arrows, and their tongue a sharp sword.'

See Ps. 3:8. 58:7. 124:6. Jb. 29:17.

There are various places of the New Testament in which future punishment is set forth under the symbol of grinding of teeth, viz. Mat. 8:12. 13:42. 25:30. Lu. 13:28. From these it would appear to denote despair, on account of the hopelessness of their condition.

So Virgil, Aen. 6, v. 557,

* Hinc exaudiiri genitus et seva sonare,' &c.

* From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains of sounding hales, and of dragging chains.

The Troy stood astonished at their cries,

And raised his guide, from whence those yell arise,

And what the crimes, and what the tortures were,

And loud laments that rent the liquid air.' Dryden.

The phrase may also denote envy, on account of the happiness of others.

Ps. 112:10,

* The wicked shall see it, and be grieved,

He shall gnash with his teeth and melt away;

The curse of the wicked shall pierce.'

Horus uses the expression, b. 4, Ode 3,

* Et jam dente minus mortor incido.'

It is also a mark of malignity and fury. Thus Ac. 7:54, 'they gnashed on Stephen with their teeth.' See also Jb. 16:9. Hesioid, in his Shield of Hercules, v. 403, applies it to the fury of wild beasts —

* As two grim lions, for a roebuck slain,
Wrath in contention rush, and them bewirt

The sound of roaring and of clashing teeth

Aries.'

It may include horror and murmuring on learning their doom. See Mat. 25:41. So Homer, Il. 23, v. 101,

* Like a thin smoke he sees the spirit fly,

And bears a feeble, lamentable cry.'

See Re. 16:9,10,11.

TEMPLE. Temple and tabernacle, or tent, are opposite.

A tabernacle or tent denotes an unsettled state, from the use of tents in places where men travel and have no settled habitations.

And thus, whilst Israel was unsettled in the desert, and even in Canaan, till the utmost of what was promised to Abraham for their sakes was fulfilled, God had a movable tabernacle, and therefore said of Himself that He also walked in a tent and in a tabernacle, 2 S. 7:6.

But, on the contrary, when the Israelites were fully settled in the promised land, God had them, to show his fixed abode with them, a standing house, palace, or temple built for Him; and, to make up the notion of dwelling or habitation complete, there were to be all things suitable to a house belonging to it.

Hence, in the holy place, there was to be a table and a candlestick, because this was the ordinary furniture of a room. The table was to have its dishes, spoons, bowls, and covers, and to be always furnished with bread upon it; and the candlestick to have its lamp continually burning.

Hence, also, there was to be a continual fire kept in the house of God, upon the altar as the focus of it.

And, besides all this, to carry the notion still further, there was to be some constant meat and provision brought into this house, which was done in the sacrifices, that were partly consumed by fire upon the altar, as God's own portion and mess, and partly eaten by the priests, who were God's family, and therefore to be maintained by Him.

Besides the flesh of the beast offered up in sacrifice, there was a mencha made of flour and oil, and a libanum that was always joined with the daily sacrifice, as the bread and drink which was to go along with God's meat.

It was also strictly commanded that there should be salt in every sacrifice, because all meat is unsavory without salt.

Lastly, all these things were to be consumed on the altar only by the holy fire that came down from heaven, because they were God's portion, and therefore to be eaten or consumed by Himself in an extraordinary manner.

From all this it appears that the building of the temple was wholly designed to make a durable and permanent mansion for God, and consequently for his worship; — a rest for the ark, a settlement for the feet of God, as David designed it, 1 Ch. 28:2; and as God Himself did declare it to David by the prophet Nathan, 1 Ch. 17:4, 5, 6.

And therefore the word temple, when used symbolically, is the symbol of the Christian church since its settlement.

In the oneirocritics, a temple is interpreted of the house of the king, which agrees with the Jewish temple being a house or palace for God, as the king or monarch of the Jews.

As a tabernacle denotes an unsettled state of the church, so even the symbol of temple may come under the notion of a tabernacle whenever the church is in a weak, declining condition. Thus, in Jer. 10:20, when the Jewish nation was reduced to such a state that the temple was to be destroyed, and the people led into captivity, the temple is spoken of under the symbols of a tabernacle and curtains, to show that the temple was, as it were, tottering, and as unsettled as a tabernacle. The like opposition is to be seen in Am. 9:11, where the kingdom or house of David in opposition comes under the notion of a tabernacle. The opposition between a house and tabernacle appears in Pr. 14:11,

¹ The house of the wicked shall be overthrown;

But the tabernacle of the upright shall flourish.'

The meaning is, the most flourishing state of the wicked shall have an end, but the upright, from a low, oppressed condition, shall be exalted to honor and happiness.

And thus Paul, comparing this life and its unsettled state with the certainty and perpetuity of the next, calls the first 'our earthly house of this tabernacle,' subject to dissolution, adding, that 'in this tabernacle we groan being burdened'; but the other is 'a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.' 2 Co. 5:1. So in He. 13:13, 14, we have the symbols of a camp and city opposed, which bear the same proportion to each other as tent and temple.

TEN. Ten, according to the style of the Scriptures, may have, besides the signification of that determinate number, that also of an indefinite one, yet so as not to imply either a very great number or a very small one.

See Ge. 31:7, 41, where ten times means many times; i.e., 20:26, ten women are many women; 1 S. 18, ten sons are many sons; Ec. 7:9, ten men are many men. See also Da. 1:20. Am. 6: 9. Zeb. 8:23.

And so in several places of Plautus, ten signifies many. Merat, act. 2, sc. 3, v. 2; act. 4, sc. 2, v. 3; Stich, act. 3, sc. 2, v. 4; Amphitryon, act. 2, sc. 1, v. 27.

Rv. 2:10, 'Ye shall have tribulation ten days.'

Ten days (says Lowman), I conceive, is not to be understood literally, — a short time of affliction, in fact! hardly agreeable to a description of that tribulation this prophecy seems to prepare the church for.

So ten thousand words, 1 Co. 14:19, are put for an indefinite number, or for a prolix discourse.

And ten thousand, or myriad, is frequently used in the same indefinite sense. See 1 S. 14:7, 'Saul hath slain his thousands, and David his ten thousands.'

That ten is a favorite number in Scripture, may be seen in many passages, viz. Ge. 24:10, Abraham's servant took ten camels; verse 22, bracelets of ten shekels; Ge. 32:15, Jacob took ten bulls and ten foals for Esau; Ex. 2:21, 'make a tabernacle with ten curtains'; 1 S. 17: 17, 'ten loaves'; verse 18, 'ten cheeses'; 2 K. 5:5, 'Naaman took ten talents, and ten changes of raiment'; Mat. 25:1, the parable of the ten virgins; Da. 7:7, the fourth beast, or great monarchy, had ten horns; Re. 12:3, John saw a dragon having ten horns. See also Re. 13:1, 17:3, 7, 12, 16.

These have been explained to mean ten distinct kingdoms, that should arise in several parts of the Roman empire, and lists have been given of them by different interpreters. But as these kingdoms were shifting and variable, it may be well not to understand the number ten too precisely, but simply that several new kingdoms were erected when the northern nations, divided the empire among themselves, which is a well known fact.

TERAPHIM were idols of the human form.

In Syriae, terep signifies to inquire, and in Arabic, to inquire with the gods of life. Teraphim may therefore denote images to inquire of, or to bestow, good things. Spencer thinks the word equivalent to seraphim, a celestial order, by the usual substitution of tar for shai in the Eastern tongues. Whatever they were, they appear to have been objects of idolatrous worship. Yet we find them in use both among heathens and unbelievers. See Ge. 31:19, 34, 35, Jud. 17:5, 18:1, 18:30, 1 S. 19:13, 16; and in 2 K. 23:21, Ezr. 21:21, Zech. 10:2. Comp. 1 S. 15:23, Ho. 3:1.

From these, as Parkhurst observes, the heathen of various nations appear to have had their panoplies, or household gods; as the Tyrians, Aradians, and Trojans, from whom the Romans derived theirs.

THIGH is the part on which the sword of a warrior is hung. See, to this purpose, Ex. 32: 27, Jud. 3:16, 21, Ps. 45:3. Song 3:8. Homer, Il. 1, 900.

In another sense, the thigh is the symbol of offspring. Thighs, literally taken, are explained by the interpreters of kinsmen.

A third symbolic signification of thigh may be taken from the custom in the time of the patriarchs — when a man impaled an ox upon another to secure his promise, he made him put his hand under his thigh. Abraham thus adjudged his servant, Ge. 22:2, 9. And Jacob adjudged Joseph that he should not bury him in Egypt, Ge. 47:29.

This is still practised in the East, as some authors tell us. In 1 Ch. 29:24, according to the original, 'the putting of hands under Solomon' is a ceremony of homage and obedience, whereby the person swearing gave the greatest token of his design to be faithful.

Jer. 31:19, 'I sware upon my thigh.'

Suiting upon the thigh was an indication of inward sorrow and compunction. See Ez. 21: 12. So also in Homer's Ilind, 2, 124,

'Divine Achilles viewed the rising flames,
And smote his thigh, and thus aloud exclaim'd,
Arm, arm, Patroclus!'

Re. 19:16, 'And on his thigh a name written; i.e., on one part of the garment which covered his thigh, the place where the sword is usually worn, a motto or inscription was observed, on which He was styled 'King of kings, and Lord of lords,' to signify that He was really possessed of a just dominion over all the princes and kingdoms of the earth.'

THREE frequently signifies, in the sacred writers, greatness, excellency, and perfection. It is thus used in Is. 19:23, 'To that day shall Israel be the third with Egypt and Assyria'; i.e., great, admired, beloved, and blessed, as it there follows. So in Pr. 22:20, according to the original, 'Have I not written unto thee three things?' which our version renders excellent things. But all the ancient versions read three things, as Durrell remarks, referring probably to the three books that bear Solomon's name. See also Pr. 8:6, and Ho. 8:12.

So ωτοι, σύλλογοι, in Ps. 80:6, and Is. 49:12, is a great measure. And so in order signifies a hero or great man, as in Ex. 14:7, and 15:4; 2 K. 7:3-9:25. See also 1 K. 3:22; Ez. 23:15.

In the Latin and Greek tongues, the number three is also my-ticid, and often signifies many, and does not so much imply an exact number, as a great increase.

Whether their attachment to the number three, as Potter observes, was owing to its supposed perfection, because containing a beginning, middle, and end, is said to signify all things in the world; or whether to the esteem the Pythagoreans and some other philosophers had for it, on account of their trinity; or lastly, to its aptness to signify the power of all the gods, who were divided into three classes, celestial, terrestrial, and infernal, I shall leave to be determined by others. Thus much is certain, that the ancients thought there was no small force and efficacy in unequal numbers, whence we find three fatal sisters, three furies, three names and appearances of Diana, three sons of Saturn, among whom the empire of the world was divided; and for the same reason we read of Jupiter's fulmen tritulum, Neptune's trident, with several other tokens of the veneration they had for this number.

Hence τριπεπτονας, thrice great, that is, very great. And in Horace, b. 1, Od. 1, triple honors are many honors.

The repetition of a word, sentence, or petition three, is a token of great earnestness; as in Jer. 22:29,

'O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of Jehovah!' Ez. 21:27,

'I will overturn, overturn, overturn it.'

It was a great emphasis when our Savior told Peter that he should deny Him three. So Paul, to show the earnestness of his prayers says that, 'He besought the Lord three', Co. 12:8. So our Savior prayed three times in his agony, that the cup might pass from Him. Mat. 26:44.

The heathen, to show their sorrow for the death of their kinsmen, called upon them three.

In Pindar, there is an allusion to some old custom of saluting a king three at his inauguration. And the acclamations in the Roman theatres seem also to have been commonly repeated three. And so in the senate-house, of which there is an instance and form in Vulc. Gallicanus, in these words —

¹ Antonius Pie, Dil to servit;
Antonius Clemens, Dil to servit;
Antonius Clodius, Dil to servit;

THRESHING is always, in the prophets, a symbol of the punishment or destruction of the subject concerned; as in Is. 41:15; Jer. 51:33, Am. 1:3. Mi. 4:13. Ha. 3:12; and in Is. 21:10, 'My threshing, and the corn of my floor,' ² people afflicted, forsaken, and grieved.'

See the different methods of threshing in ancient times, described by Bishop Lowth, in his note on Is. 28:27, 28, who thus paraphrases the passage above alluded to, in 21:10: — 'O thou, the object upon which I shall exercise the severity of my discipline, that shalt lie under my afflicting hand, like corn spread upon the floor to be threshed out and winnowed, to separate the chaff from the wheat;' and he adds, 'The image of threshing is frequently used by the Hebrew poets, with great elegance and force, to express the punishment of the wicked, and the trial of the good, or the utter dispersion and destruction of God's enemies.'

THRONE. The symbol of a kingdom or government.

Thus, in holy Scripture, throne is put for kingdom. Ge. 41:4, 'According to thy word shall all my people be ruled; only in the throne will I be greater than thou.' In 2 S. 3:10, kingdom and throne are set synonymously, 'to translate the kingdom from the house of Saul; and to set up the throne of David over Israel.' And both together, as in 2 S. 7:13, 'I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever.'

And thus God, to represent himself symbolically as king of the Jews, had the mercy-seat with the cherubim about it, as his throne.

See Is. 6:1, 2. 2 K. 19:15. 1 S. 4:4. 2 S. 6:2, 1 Ch. 13:6. Ps. 80:1.

In like manner, 'the settling of the throne' signifies the settling or establishment of the government in peace; as in 2 S. 7:12, 13, 16, where throne and kingdom explain each other.

And the enlargement of the throne implies a great accession of dominion and power; as in 1 K. 1:37, compared with verse 47. And therefore Solomon, when he had subjugated all the nations round about him, so that they were obliged to bring him tribute, and had thus enlarged his dominions beyond what David had possessed before, made a new throne, a great throne of ivory, which symbolically represented his power, and the enlargement of his dominions, and the peace and prosperity of his reign.

A throne is, by all the oneirocritics, in ch. 225, explained of power. And by the Persian and Egyptian in ch. 261, a royal throne is explained of a king, or his eldest son.

In the magic oracles of Zoroaster, Arayens Oparos, the throne of necessity, signifies the power of fate or death.

Throne of God may signify a great, magnificent throne, according to a usual Hebraism, where nouns joined with the word God acquire a sense of excellency and greatness.

According to which, the throne of God may be a high and exalted throne, a royal or imperial seat, from whence the political world is ruled, as God from heaven rules the whole universe. See Is. 66:1. See also under CHARIOT.

As thrones are seats of dignity, and are to distinguish those who have the administration of government committed to them, from the rest of the people who are to be governed by them, they can with no propriety be applied to every member of the kingdom. So in Re. 20:4, where it is said, 'I say thrones, and they sat upon them,' the meaning, no doubt, is, that some sat on them, while others had no thrones appointed to them. The expressions seem to allude to the Sanhedrin, in which the members sat on raised seats or thrones, on each hand of the president. The same allusion may exist in Mat. 19:28.

Ps. 99:14, and Ps. 97:2, 'justice and judgment are the basis of his throne'; i.e., justice and equity are the foundation of all his proceedings.

THUNDER, in Ps. 29:3, is called the voice of God. This voice comes from heaven; and as heaven signifies the station of the supreme visible power, which is the political heaven, so the thunder is the voice and proclamation of that power, and of its will and laws, implying the obedience of the subjects, and at last overcoming all opposition.

So that, in this sense, thunder is the symbol of such oracles or laws as are enacted with terror, and so terrify men into a suitable obedience. And thus the law of Moses was ushered in by thunders and lightnings. Ex. 19:16.

The oneirocritics had some notion of thunder signifying the publication of things. See Artem. b. 2, c. 8. ‘Thunder discovers those that are hidden or desire to be hid.’

Thunder, considered as a motion or shaking, signifies a revolution in the state, or change of affairs; as in Hag. 2:6,7,21.

And from the terror which thunder occasions, it is frequently used in Scripture of God’s discomfiting the enemies of his church; as in I.S. 2:10; 7:10; Ps. 18:13; and in Is. 29:6, of his punishing the rebellious Jews.

Amongst the pagans all other portentous symbols were stopped by that of the thunder, unless the thunder did confirm the former by being on the same side. Senec. Nat. Quest. h. 2, c. 34, and 41. They esteemed thunder the immediate voice of God, and therefore thought it presumption to consult about any thing when God spake. His voice ought to impose silence on all, according to that eternal maxim of all government, that when the supreme authority speaks, the lesser courts cannot exert their power, and the presence of the supreme magistrate supercedes, for the time, the power of all the inferiors.

With the Egyptians, thunder was the symbol of a voice at a great distance. Horap. Hierog. 22.

The seat of thunders and lightnings is the air. Thunders and lightnings are sometimes mere accompaniments of the divine presence; but at other times they are symbols of great judgments on the earth. When they proceed from the throne of God, as in Re. 4:5, they are 60 representations of God’s glories and awful majesty; but when fire comes down from heaven upon earth, it expresses some judgment of God upon the world; as in Re. 8:5, 20:9, 16:19. Those mentioned in Re. 8:5, being previous to the sounding of the trumpets, may be understood as a general description of the many calamities of that period.

‘A thunder storm and tempest,’ says Lowman, p. 91, ‘that throws down all before it, is a fit metaphor to express the calamities of war, from civil disturbances, or foreign invasion, which often, like a hurricane, lay all things waste, as far as they reach. It is thus Isaiah expresses the invasion of Israel by Shalmaneser, king of Assyria, 28:2,

Behold the mighty One, the exceedingly strong One,
Like a storm of hail, like a destructive tempest;
Like a rapid flood of mighty waters pouring down,
He shall dash them to the ground with his hand.’

See also Ez. 13:13.

It is a just observation of Sir Isaac Newton, that ‘in the prophetic language, tempests, winds, or the motions of clouds, are put for wars; thunder, or the voice of a cloud, for the voice of a multitude; and storms of thunder, lightning, hail, and overflowing rain, for a tempest of war, descending from the heavens and clouds politie.’

The natural thunder is well described by Jn. 3:29, &c., and 37:1, &c., —

‘You can understand the expunctions of the clouds, And the thunder of his habitation.’

‘At this day you have seen mebleth,

And is moved out of its place;

Hear attentively the concussion of his voice;

And the sound that goeth forth from his mouth:

He dogetteth it under the whole heaven;

And his lightning to the ends of the earth.

After it a voice reareth, He thundereth with his majestic voice;

And He will not restrain them (i. e. his bolts) when his voice is heard;

God burneth marvelously with his voice;

He doth great things, which we cannot comprehend.’

TIME. According to Artemidorus, b. 2, c. 65, days, months, and years, are symbolical terms, and are not always to be understood literally, but are to be interpreted according to the circumstances of the case, and the age of the person or dreamer.

And so in the sacred writings, a day, in some places, is put for a year; as in Nu. 4:31. Ez. 4:6.

This practice seems to have arisen, either from days and years being all one in the primitive state of the world, or else from the ignorance of men at first, in settling words to express the determined spaces of time. A day with them was a year; a month, a year; three months, a year; four months, or six months, a year, as well as the whole yearly revolution of the sun.

The Egyptians, from whom the symbolical language chiefly came at first, gave the name of year to several spaces of time. See Suidas, v. Υπότιος, Υφασμάτων.

The day is a period and revolution, and so it is an éveillot, a year. Plutarch and Diomedes call four months, or a season, were called a year. As for the annual revolution of the sun, it was called by them the year of the sun, or the year of God; Horap. Hierog. h. 1. Hence a full year is called by Virgil a great year. Ann. h. 3, v. 281; and the year of Jupiter, by Homer, II. 2, v. 131.

Terms of time being thus ambiguous among the ancients, they must in the symbolical language be, by the rule of proportion, determined by the circumstances. Thus, if days were mentioned of a matter of great importance and duration, they must be explained by solar years, or full years. If years were spoken of a mean subject, as of the persons of men, and seemed to be above proportion, they must be explained of so many durnal years, or equinoctial years. This is evidently the principle of Artemidorus, who finds mysteries in all numbers, and all expressions determining spaces of time.

Upon this also are grounded Joseph’s expostions of the dreams of the chief butler and baker. For otherwise three branches should rather signify three distinct springs or solar years, as the seven ears of corn in Pharaoh’s dream portend seven distinct crews, and by consequence seven solar years. But the subject matter altered the property. Pharaoh’s dream concerned the whole nation, the king being a representative of the people. But the chief butler’s dream concerned only his own person.

The way of the symbolical language in expressing determinations the spaces of time, may be yet set in a plainer light from the manner of predictions, or the nature of prophetic visions. For a prophecy concerning future events is a picture or representation of the events in symbols, which, being brought from objects visible at one view or cast of the eye, rather represent the events in miniature, than in full proportion, giving us more to understand than what we see.

And, therefore, that the duration of the events may be represented in terms suitable to the symbols of the visions, the symbols of duration must be also drawn in miniature.

Thus, for instance, if a cast empire, persecuting the church for 1260 years, was to be symbolically represented by a beast, the decorum of the symbol would require that the said time of its tyranny should not be expressed by 1260 years, because it would be monstrous and unnatural to represent a beast ravaging for a long a space of time, but by 1260 days.

And thus a day may imply a year, because that short revolution of the sun bears that same proportion to the yearly, as the type to the antitype.

In the chief butler’s dream, the three branches signified three days; in that of the chief baker, the three heads signified the same. In Pharaoh’s dream, the seven fat and seven lean heifers portended so many years of plenty and famine; as did also the seven good and seven bad ears of corn. So likewise in Nebuchadnezzar’s image, the proportion and order of the members signifies the order of succession and time: the head begins, and signifies the Babylonian monarchy; and so on to the feet, legs, and toes, signifying the last (tyrannical) powers exercising cruelty against the saints and church of God.

Thus, also, in the portentum exhibited to the Greeks in Amis, of eight young birds with the mother, which is the ninth, being swallowed up by a dragon, who is after that turned into a stone, signifying that the Greeks should spend nine years in their war against Troy, and that, in the tenth year, they should take the town. Homer, II. 2, v. 308.

Cicero objects against this interpretation, (de Divinit. h. 2,) and demands why the birds were rather to be interpreted of years, than of months or days. But the answer is obvious. Years only were proportionable to the event, and to the way of managing wars in those days. So that the rule of proportion is to be framed upon the circumstances.

There is such another portentum in Virgil, Ann. h. 8, v. 42, where thirty young pigs denote as many years.

And in Sibyls Italicus, there is an anguria set down of a hawk pursuing and killing fifteen doves, and, whilst he was stooping upon another, an eagle comes and forces the hawk away; which is there explained of Hannibal’s wasting Italy during sixteen years, and his being driven away by Scipio.

In several places of Scripture, a day signifies an appointed time or season, as in Is. 34:6, 63:4; and so may imply a long time of many years, as, in He. 3:8,9, ‘the day of temptation in the wilderness,’ is the time of forty years.

In the Latin authors, a day is used to signify time in general, as in Tully, de Nat. Deor. h. 2, ‘Opinorum enim commenta delet dies, naturae iudicia confundit?’ and in Terence, ‘dien adimere scridunt hominibus?’

And dies also may signify more especially the whole year, as it does in these verses of Lucretius, b. 1, v. 10,

‘Nam si quid ex species pateretur est versus Dies,
Et resurget vesti genitrix non Pavon.’

In Tully, dies perregunt signifies a short time, yet so as to contain 110 days.

Again, annus is the season; thus, annus hyberni, in Horace, is the winter; and in Virgil, formosissimus annus is the spring.

And kalends, a senecta, is sometimes used for a year, as in Is. 12:7; and sexages is put for a year in many places; as in Sophocles, in the Oriental oneirocritics, in Alcibiades, and Ammonius. And Ovid has used the word tempus to signify a year; Fast. b. 3, v. 103. Lastly, haora, hour, signifies time indefinitely, both in sacred and profane authors. In Aristophanes, long ev haora, in the spring time; in Thucydides, copu ev haora, the summer time.

And so hora is used in the Latin authors for time or season in general. See Vossius Etym. TORCH, when considered in respect only of its burning, is a symbol of great anger and destruction. It is thus used by the prophet Zechariah, 12:6,

‘In that day will I make the leaders of Judah,
As a hearth of fire among wood,
And as a torch of fire on a sheaf;
And they shall devour, on the right hand and on the left,
All the people round about.’

So in Is. 7:1, Rezin king of Syria, and the king of Israel, two bitter enemies of Ahaz king of Judah, threatening war against Judah, are called ‘two tails of smoking firebrands.’

Thus the dream of Bechira when with child of Paris, how she brought forth a torch which burnt the city, was explained by Esacus the oneirocritic, that the child would prove to be the ruin of his country. And therefore Euripides calls this Paris by the name of Δαλος πυρος πυρη, the bitter representative of a torch. And so Hesiae, speaking of Hannibal, compares him to torches set on fire, or a blasting wind, another symbol of war:

‘Dives per orbis Afer at Judas,
Cen flammis per aeras, vel Eros
Per Sicula equum undas.’

A star burning like a torch may be a description of that sort of comets which, for the figure of them, are called lampadas. And this is by Aristotle called κορητης, is in the author of the description of the Olympians called λαπτης, and as it is supposed to be mentioned in the Marble Chronicle at Oxford, it is there said to burn, κατεκαν.

Now, a comet was always thought to be a prodigy of bad omen; and that in the times of Augustus only excepted by Pliny.

And streams of fire like torches, of which Livy gives some instances, were looked upon as ill omens. And Sibyls Italicus, describing the prodigies which foreboded the even of the battle at Cannæ, mentions such torches.

The ancient Grecian signals for beginning a battle were lighted torches, thrown from both armies by men called πυρφόροι, or πυροφόροι, who were priests of Mars, and therefore held inviolable, and who, having cast their torches, had safe refuge.

TOWER. Towers and fortresses are put, in the figurative language of prophecy, for defenders and protectors, whether by counsel or strength, in peace or in war. 2 S. 29:51, ‘God is the tower of salvation for his king.’ Ps. 61:3, ‘Thou hast been a shelter for me,

And a strong tower from the enemy.’

Pr. 18:10,

‘The name of Jehovah is a strong tower;

‘The righteous runneth into it, and is safe.’

Is. 33:18, ‘Where is he that numbered the towers?’ that is, the commander of the enemy’s forces, who surveyed the fortifications of the city, and took an account of the height, strength, and situation of the walls and towers, that he might know where to make the assault with the greatest advantage. See Livy’s note.

Towers are sometimes used to denote proud men, tyrants, and men in high station. Thus, in Is. 2:15, 30:25.

They were used, naturally enough, as oasla, or places of safety. It is to this use of them the sacred writer alludes in Pr. 18:10, above quoted. Euripides, in Medea, v. 389, has an expression to this purpose — ‘Remaining therefore a short time, if any tower of safety should appear to us.’

They were also used for the purpose of watching. See 2 K. 9:17, and 17:19. See also Is. 23:13.

TRAVAILING. Travailing (with child) is a symbol of great endeavors to bring something to pass, not without much difficulty, pain, and danger. And the compassing the end, which the persons represented by the symbol aimed at, is a deliverance from the pain and danger they labored under.

Hence the symbol of travailing with child is often used in the prophets to denote a state of anguish and misery; as in Is. 26:17, 18, 60:7, Jer. 4:31, 13:21, 30:6, 7.

And also in the New Testament, the pains of child-bearing are used to signify the sorrow of tribulation or persecution; as in Mat. 24:8, Mk. 13:8, Jn. 16:21, 22, 1 Th. 5:3.

And Paul applies the expression to the propagation of the gospel through persecutions, Ga. 4:19, 'My little children, of whom I travail in birth again until Christ be formed in you'; i. e. for whom I am concerned and in fear, till the Christian doctrine has overcome in you the habits of sin. And in Ro. 8:22, he compares the earnest desire of the creation for the kingdom of Christ to the pains of a woman in travail.

The same metaphor is not unusual in pagan authors, and Cicero has it more than once. It is likewise understood by the Persian and Egyptian interpreters of afflictions and cares, in ch. 127.

On the other hand, the symbol of the birth betokens joy and deliverance; and especially if the child be a male, as in Jn. 16:21. And in Is. 66:7, where the man-child is interpreted by the Targum of a king, a deliverer.

TREAD. To tread under, or trample on, signifies to overcome and bring under subjection. Thus, in Ps. 66:12,

'Through God we shall be exalted,
For it is He that shall tread down our enemies.'

See also Is. 10:36, 14:25, Da. 7:23, Ps. 111:13, comp. with Lk. 10:13.

To tread upon oaths, in Homer, signifies to break or violate them. See H. I. v. 157, where the word πατέος is used.

In Re. 11:2, the outer court is said to be given to the Gentiles, that is, should become profane and common, and the 'holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months,' which Henry More thus explains: 'A kind of Pagan Christianity, instead of pure Christianity, shall visibly domineer for forty and two months of years, that is, for 1260 years.'

The operation of treading the wine-press is well known, and from thence many emblematic expressions are borrowed, and employed in various parts of Scripture. See Ps. 58:11, Is. 63:3, &c.

TREE. Trees were at first, in the primitive way of building, used for pillars; and agreeably to this, they denote in the symbolical language, according to their respective bulk and height, the several degrees of great or rich men, or the nobles of a kingdom; as in Zech. 11:1, 2,

'Open thy doors, O Lebanon, that the fire may devour thy cedar;

Howl, O fir-tree, for the cedar is fallen,

Because all the mighty are spoiled.

Howl, O ye oaks of Bashan,

For the forest of the vintage is come down.'

where the words, 'all the mighty are spoiled,' show that the prophecy does not point at trees, but at men.

See, to the same purpose, Is. 2:13, 10:17, 18, 19, 11:8, Jer. 23:23, Ez. 31:4. See Lowth's excellent note on Is. 2:13.

The oneirocritics are very full in this particular, as the Persian and Egyptian in ch. 149, and all of them in ch. 151 and 165, where trees blown down with the wind, signify the destruction of great men.

Homer, who has many remnants and notions of the Eastern language, and whose comparisons are exactly just, very often compares his heroes to trees, as in b. 14. Hector, felled by a stone, is compared to an oak overturned by a thunderbolt. In b. 4, the fall of Simoënius is compared to that of a poplar; and in b. 17, that of Euphorbus, to the fall of a beautiful olive.

A tree exceeding great, may be the symbol of a king or monarchy, as in Da. 4. And as the vine, in the dream of Astyages, cited by Valerius Maximus, b. 1, c. 7.

Ez. 17:21, 'the high tree, and the green tree,' refer to Nebuchadnezzar; 'the low and the green tree,' to the Jews.

Tree of life, is a tree that gives fruit to eternal life, so that they who eat thereof continually shall never die. It is thus explained, Ge. 3:22, and is therefore a proper symbol to signify immortality.

From the happiness of eating of the tree of life in Paradise, any sort of true happiness or joy may come under the symbol of a tree of life; as in Pr. 15:4, 'A wholesome tongue is a tree of life,' meaning, a tongue that gives sound advice, or pacifies great offences. And so also in 11:30, 'Hope deferred maketh the heart sick; but when the desire cometh, it is a tree of life.'

TRUMPET. The trumpet sounding is, in Ex. 19:16-19, the forerunner of the appearance of God, and of the proclamation of the law.

Amongst the Jews, trumpets were used on several occasions:

1. To give notice, whilst they were in the wilderness, when the camp should remove. Nu. 10:2.
2. To call assemblies. Nu. 10:2.
3. To proclaim the return of the jubilee. Le. 25:9.
4. To sound over the daily burnt-offering, and over the burnt offerings and peace offerings, on the solemn days and new moons. 2 Ch. 29:27, 28; Ps. 81:3.
5. To give notice of the entrance and going out of the Sabbath.

6. To sound alarms in time of war; whence they signify, in the prophets, a denunciation of judgments, and a warning of the imminent approach of them; as in Jer. 4:19, 20, 21.

See also Jer. 4:14, 51:27, Am. 3:6, Zeph. 1:16.

7. Trumpets sounded at the inauguration of the Jewish kings. 1 K. 1:34, 2 K. 9:13, 11:14.

8. When the city Jericho was to be taken, the trumpets were to sound, and a shout was to be made. Jos. 6:16.

9. Trumpets were used at the laying of the foundation of the second temple. Esdr. 3:10.

And it is highly probable that trumpets were used at the laying of the foundation of the first; for during the time of the building of it, music was continually used. Compare 1 Ch. 6:31, 32, with 16:5, and 25:1.

Amongst the heathens, trumpets were used, also, upon diverse accounts:

1. The Romans made use of them to notify the watches in the night, and to give notice also of the time upon several other occasions.

2. They made use of them at the inauguration of their emperors.

3. The Roman magistrates caused the trumpets to sound at the execution of criminals, whom they looked upon as sacrifices, or persons devoted, as appears from Tacitus and Senecca.

4. Trumpets were used by the heathen in sounding alarms for war. Thus Homer makes the heaven to sound the trumpet when the gods went to war.

'Heaven in loud thunders bids the trumpet sound,
And wide beneath them groans the rending ground.'

And Plutarch, in the Life of Sylla, says that 'there were many omens of the war between Sylla and Marius; but that the greatest of all was, the sound of a trumpet in the air.'

5. Trumpets were used by the heathen at the destruction of cities. Thus, in Am. 2:2,

'I will send a fire upon Moab,
Which shall devolve the palaces of Kirioth;
And Moab shall die with 'ummi,
With shouting, and the sound of the trumpet.'

And exactly in the same manner is the burning of Troy described by Virgil, Aen. 2, v. 313,

'New clamors and new clangors now arise,
The sound of trumpets mixed with fighting cries.'

Homer also makes mention of this custom in the following verses, Il. 18, v. 218,

'As the loud trumpet's brazen mouth from far,
With shrilling clangor, sounds the alarm of war,
From the wall, the earth, the sky, the air, so high,
And the rampart, halberds and thick towers reply;
So high his brazen voice the horn raised,
Hosts drop their arms, and trembled as they heard.'

According to the same custom, the Romans demolished Corinth by sound of trumpet. These were a kind of religious acts.

And therefore Alexander the Great, concerning Persepolis, declared to his generals, that they ought to make a sacrifice to their ancestors, by its destruction.

And thus the inhabitants of Jericho were accursed or devoted, and as sacrifices slain. Jos. 6:17, 18, 21.

6. The foundations of cities were laid at the sound of musical instruments; in allusion to which, in Jb. 38:9, 7, it is said that 'when God laid the foundation of the earth, the stars and angels sang and shouted for joy,' which shows that such a custom had been used in the patriarchal times; to which also there is allusion in Zech. 4:7.

The trumpet was used to proclaim danger. Thus, Jo. 2:1,

'Blow the trumpet in Zion,
And sound an alarm in my holy mountain.'

as a signal for the immediate approach of the hosts, and to excite the hearts of the people to repentance.

Am. 3:6,

'Shall a trumpet be blown in a city,
And the people not be afraid?'

i. e. as the people run together through fear, when the signal of an approaching enemy is made, so let my warning strike the Israelites with terror.

Re. 4:1, 'I heard as it were a trumpet talking with me.' This may probably allude (says Lowman) to the custom of the Jewish church, that upon opening of the gates of the temple, the priests sounded their trumpets, to call the Levites and stationary men to their attendance.

There was an instituted festival among the Jews, called the feast of trumpets, celebrated in the beginning of the civil year, in the month Tisri, answering to our September. The day was kept solemn, all servile business was suspended, and particular sacrifices were offered. Le. 23:24, 25. The new moons, or first days of every month, were celebrated also by the sound of trumpets, Nu. 10:10; and by extraordinary sacrifices, &c. Ps. 81:3.

TWELVE, a sacred number, symbolical of just proportion, beauty, stability, and the like.

Thus, Ex. 24:4, twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes; Ex. 28:21, twelve precious stones; Le. 24:5, twelve cakes; Nu. 7:3, twelve oxen; Nu. 7:84, twelve chargers, twelve silver bowls, twelve spoons; Nu. 7:87, twelve bullocks, twelve rams, twelve lambs; Nu. 17:2, twelve rods; Jos. 4:3, twelve stones out of Jordan; 1 K. 7:25, the sea stood on twelve oxen; 1 K. 9:20, twelve lions.

All these twelve, no doubt, had a reference to the number of the tribes.

1 K. 11:30, Jeroboam's garment was rent in twelve pieces; 1 K. 18:31, Elijah took twelve stones, and built an altar; 1 K. 19:19, Elisha ploughed with twelve yoke of oxen; and so in many other places, where the number twelve occurs.

Jb. 38:32, 'Canst thou bring forth the twelve signs?' Ez. 43:16, the altar shall be twelve cubits long and twelve broad; Mat. 10:2, twelve apostles; Mat. 14:20, of the fragments twelve baskets; Mat. 26:53, twelve legions of angels; Lu. 22:42, when Jesus was twelve years old; Jn. 11:3, are there not twelve hours in the day? Ez. 7:8, and Jacob begat the twelve patriarchs; Re. 12:1, on his head a crown of twelve stars; Re. 21:12, the city had twelve gates, and at the gates twelve angels; Re. 21:14, the wall of the city had twelve foundations; Re. 22:2, the tree of life bare twelve manner of fruits.

And we find the mystical number twelve multiplied into itself in Re. 21:17, 144 cubits, according to the measure of a man, as measured by the angel. ¶

The note of Bossuet, bishop of Meaux, on Re. 7:4, is worth transcribing. 'This single passage,' says he, 'may show the mistake of those who always expect the numbers in the Revelation to be precise and exact; for it is to be supposed, that there should be in each tribe 12,000 elect, neither more nor less, to make up the total sum of 144,000? It is not by such trifles, and how sense, the divine oracles are to be explained. We are to observe, in the numbers of the Revelation, a certain figurative proportion, which the Holy Ghost designs to point out to observation. As there were twelve patriarchs and twelve apostles, twelve becomes a sacred number in the synagogue, and in the Christian church. This number of twelve, first multiplied into itself, and then by a thousand, makes 144,000. The bishop observes, in the solid proportion of this square number, the unchangeableness of the truth of God and his promises; perhaps it may mean the beauty and stability of the Christian church, keeping to the apostolic purity of faith and worship.' Lowman, p. 81.

TWO. A symbolical number.

The two olive-trees, Zch. 4:3. See OLIVE-TREE.

The two witnesses, Re. 11:4.

'Two,' says Dr. Henry More, 'though never so many, partly by reason of the types in the Old Testament to which they allude, viz. Moses and Aaron, Elijah and Elisha, Zechariah and Joshua, who showed their zeal for the purity of God's worship against the idolatry in the wilderness, and in the Baalitish idolatry, and in the captivity of Babylon.'

'There may also be an allusion to things in this division into two, viz. to magistracy and ministry, to the Old Testament and the New, to the people of the Jews, and to the virgin company of Christians.'

The two tables of testimony. Ex. 21:18.

Two disciples sent forth at a time. Mk. 6:7.

Two women who had wings. Zch. 5:9.

Two immutable things, the promise and the oath of God. He. 6:18.

It is sometimes used to denote very few. Thus, in 1 K. 17:12, 'I am gathering two sticks;' i. e. a few. So in Is. 7:21, 'two sheep;' i. e. a small flock.

In Persius, 'Vel duo vel nemo'—two or none—next to none. And the like in Homer, Il. 2, v. 346.

V.

VAIL. A covering worn by females in token of modesty and subjection.

It was also used as an ornamental part of dress, richly embroidered and transparent, in very early ages. Homer describes, in his Iliad, a beautiful one offered by the Trojan matrons at the altar of Minerva. And Penelope's is thus described in Pope's Odyssey,

53

'A veil translucent, o'er her brow displayed,
Her beauty seems, and only seems, to shroud.'

Ceres is said to have worn a black veil by the Grecian poets, either as a sign of sorrow for the loss of Proserpine, or to conceal her grief from observation.

We find Rebekah makes use of one, on being informed that Isaac was approaching to meet her. Ge. 24:65.

When Judith meets Tamar, she is described as covering herself with a veil. This phrase is rather remarkable, as Judith, on that account possibly, supposed her to be a courtesan. Ge. 38:14. And it is said that slaves formerly in Greece wore larger veils than other people.

Euripides makes Andromache complain, in his play of that name, 'I was conducted from my husband's bed to the strand, my face covered with the veil of a captive.' It is well known that the veils of female slaves in the Levant, at present, cover the whole body, and that the Greeks have been more toroious of their old customs than most other nations.

That the Jewish ladies, in Isaiah's time, wore veils, is plain from Is. 3:19.

Virgil describes Helen as veiled, Aen. 1, v. 651,

'Et circumstretto croso velamen acutus,
Omatu Arigua Hellen.'

The veil, as a mark of subjection, seems to be referred to by the apostle, in 1 Cor. 11:10, where women are required to have on their head ενοστα, i. e. καλυπη, a veil, to show that they are subject to their husbands, who exercise εξουσια, or power, over them. And to this may be referred Ge. 20:10, where the veil of Sarah is adverted to.

Euripides, speaking of Heruba, says, Hechth. v. 483, 'she lies wrapped in veils,' which he explains, v. 493, by 'she lies like a servant, or subject, on the earth.'

The veil was worn by suppliant and unhappy persons of either sex; see 2 S. 15:30, 19:4. E.t. 6:12. Jer. 14:3,4, to which may be referred Mk. 14:72, where the term τετράβατος is applied to Peter as a penitent. But see Parkhurst on the term.

The veil is employed as the symbol of ignorance. Thus, Is. 25:7,

'And on this mountain shall He destroy
The covering that covered the face of all people,
And the veil that was spread over all nations.'

See also 2 Cor. 3:14, &c., where Paul alludes to the veil of Moses, and says, when the Jews shall attend to and receive the doctrine of Christ, the veil that is over their hearts, in the reading of the Old Testament, shall be taken away. See Origen against Celsus, b. 5, p. 271.

VALLEY, though for most part used literally, is sometimes to be met with in a figurative and symbolical sense, as in Is. 22:1, 'The oracle concerning the valley of vision.'

Jerusalem is here called by that name symbolically, because, as Jerome observes, this city was the seminary or school of the prophets, in which the temple was built, and the visions of God were multiplied, where He manifested Himself visibly in the holy place.

Ps. 23:4,

'Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me.'

i. e. though I encounter the most imminent peril of death itself. The psalm speaks of God as a shepherd, and the metaphor is taken from sheep, which, wandering in search of pasture, and having strayed into shallow valleys, become liable to the dangers arising from the incursion of wild beasts that make their haunt there. See Ps. 119:176.

Ps. 84:7, 'who, passing through the valley of Baca, make it a well.'

Baca means a large shrub, or tree, which the Arabs still call by that name, probably so called from its distilling an odorous gum; from bee, to weep or ooze out. It appears, according to Celsius (quoted by Parkhurst), to have been a rugged valley, embarrassed with bushes and stones, which could not be passed through without labor and tears, such as, we may collect from De. 21:4, were to be found in Judea. And, as Parkhurst adds, 'A valley of this kind was a striking emblem of that vale of thorns and tears through which all believers must pass to the heavenly Jerusalem.' The Septuagint, Aquila, and the Vulgate, all translate the word baca by weeping or tears. But see a valuable note in Horne's Introdt. vol. iii. p. 42, Ed. 2.

Ho. 2:15,

'And from thence will I give her vineyards,
And the valley of Achor for a door of hope.'

It was in this valley, immediately after the execution of Achan, that God said to Joshua, Jos. 8:1, 'Fear not, neither be thou dismayed, and promised to support him against Ai, her king, and her people. And from this time, Joshua drove on his conquests with uninterrupted success. In like manner, the tribulations of the Jews, in their present dispersion, shall open to them the door of hope, and there, i. e. in the wilderness and in the vale of tribulation, under those circumstances of present difficulty, mixed with cheering hope. See Horsley in loc. Valley of Hinom or Gehenna. 2 Ch. 28:3. Jer. 7:32. Is. 30:33, and other places.

Gehenna, or Tophet, or the Valley of Hinom, was a place near Jerusalem, of which we hear first in Jos. 15:8. It was there that the cruel sacrifices of children were made by fire to Moloch, the Ammonitish idol. The place was also called Tophet, and that, as is supposed, from the noise of drums (toph signifying a drum), a noise raised on purpose to drown the cries of the helpless infants. As this place was, in process of time, considered as an emblem of hell, or the place of torment reserved for the punishment of the wicked in a future state, the name Tophet came gradually to be used in this sense, and at length to be confined to it. The term Gehenna, which corresponds to Tophet, occurs twelve times in the New Testament.

In Is. 30:33, the place where the Assyrian army was destroyed is called Tophet, by a metonymy; for that army was destroyed probably at a greater distance from Jerusalem, and quite on the opposite side of it. See Lowth in loc.

Jeremiah, 31:40, calls it the 'valley of dead bodies and of ashes,' from its having been made a common burying-place, and a receptacle for the rubbish and filth of the city. The Valley of Hinom lay to the west of the city, winding to the south.

Zech. 12:11,

'In that day the mourning shall be great in Jerusalem,
As the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddo.'

Jerome says this was a place near Jezreel. De Lisle places it near Megiddo, where Josiah was slain, over whom great lamentation was made. 2 Ch. 35:22-25.

This mourning of the Jews, Newcome thinks, will take place on the reappearance of their Messiah from heaven, Re. 1:7, 20:4, when the restored descendants of those Jews who slew Him shall be touched with the deepest compunction for the guilt of their forefathers.

Jo. 3:2, 'the valley of Jehoshaphat.'

As the term Jehoshaphat signifies in Hebrew 'the judgment of God,' it is very probable that the valley here mentioned is symbolical, and means the valley of the divine judgment, wherever that might be. For it is said, 'I will gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and I will plead with them there.' In this sense the Chaldee paraphrase understands it, and renders it 'the valley of the division of judgment.' And Theodotion, 'into the place of judgment.' And in verse 14, it is called 'the valley of decision.' From these passages, the Jews and some Christians have been of opinion, that the last judgment will be solemnized in the valley of Jehoshaphat. If we understand the words in this sense, the valley of Jehoshaphat will denote no particular place in the country of Judea, but only some place where God would execute his vengeance on the enemies of the Jews, which, as Grotius on the place remarks, may be called valley, from the manner of human judgments — the judges sitting in a more exalted place, and the criminals standing in a lower.

VESSEL. Used to represent the human body or person. 1 Th. 4:1, 1 S. 21:5. Cicero has a similar phrase — 'Corpus quidem quasi res est aliqd animal recipiendum.' See also Lucret. b. 3, v. 441, and v. 553.

Earthen vessels, or vessels of shell, 2 Co. 4:7, the ministers of the gospel.

The weaker vessel, 1 Pe. 3:7, the wife, as compared with her husband.

Vessels of wrath, or of mercy, Ro. 9:22, 23, such nations or communities as are objects of God's favor or displeasure, in allusion to the comparison of the potter, verse 21.

A chosen vessel unto Me, Ac. 9:15; i. e. a most choice instrument. Neither, says Grotius, did Polybius, speaking of Damocles, use the word akenos, a vessel, in another sense; for this man was a most profitable vessel for service, and most fit for business. Compare 2 Ti. 2:20, 21.

VINE AND VINEYARD. A well-known emblem of the church of God, whether under the old or new dispensation. See a beautiful allegory under this image in Ps. 80:15, &c.; in Is. 5:1, where, at verse 7, it is said, 'The vineyard of Jehovah is the house of Israel.' And the same image is frequently employed by our Lord; as in Mat. 20:1, 21:28. Lu. 13:6. See also Jn. 15:1. Jer. 2:21. Ez. 19:10. Ho. 10:1.

Vineyards were usually the scenes of joy, especially at the time of vintage. Hence, when God threatens by Amos, Am. 5:17, 'And in all vineyards shall be waiting,' it was revering the customary inerriment, and a mark of indig-nition.

VIRGIN. This term is often used to denote a people, city, or nation. Thus, Is. 47:1, 'Come down and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon!' Jer. 14:17, 31:42, 46:11. La. 2:13. Am. 5:2.

It is sometimes used as the symbol of purity,

2 Co. 11:2, 'that I may present you as a chaste virgin to Christ.'

It is also employed to represent freedom from idolatrous defilement and corruption; as in Re. 14:4, 'These are they who are not defiled with women, for they are virgins.'

VOICE. The voice of a person, according to the Indian Interpreter, ch. 50, denotes his fame and reputation among the people.

A voice to a person from behind, when the word behind is not used to denote symbolically a thing future, signifies, that the person to whom it is directed is gone out of the way, and requires to be recalled, which implies repentance. Thus, in Is. 30:21,

'And thine ears shall hear a voice prompting thee behind, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it; Say not aside to the right or to the left.'

Agreeably to this, a voice to a person from behind, in order to direct him to behold a vision behind him, will denote that the vision relates to something past or existent, and to be observed as well backwards towards the time past, as forwards towards that which is to come.

In Ge. 4:10, the voice of Abel's blood is said to cry unto God; a very singular expression, importuning that God is the spectator and avenger of all murderous transactions — according to the dying words of Zechariah, when slain by Joash, 2 Ch. 24:22, 'The Lord look upon it, and require it.' There being no successor to Abel to avenge his death, God takes up his cause and punishes the fratricide. Thus as Paul remarks, 'whether we live, we live by the Lord, and whether we die, we die by the Lord; living and dying we are the Lord's.' Ro. 14:8.

Thunder is repeatedly called the voice of God. Thus, Jb. 37:5,

'Hear attentively his voice with trembling;
Hear attentively the concussion of his voice;
He directeth it under the whole heaven,
And his lightning to the ends of the earth.
After it a voice roareth;
God thundereth with his majestic voice;
He will not restrain (his thunderbolts) when his voice is heard.
God thundereth with his majestic voice;
He doth great things, which we cannot comprehend.'

W.

WALL is the strength of a city, and therefore the symbol of security. So in Is. 26:1, 'Salvation will God appoint for walls and bulwarks.'

Zech. 2:5,

'I will be a wall of fire round about her,
And the glory in the midst of her.'
This sublime image, a wall of fire, strongly expresses the divine protection, and must have reminded the Jews of the pillar of fire, by which God directed and defended their ancestors.

The 'glory in the midst' is, no doubt, an allusion to the symbol of the divine presence in the holy of holies. Ro. 9:4.

A high wall denotes a still greater degree of stability and safety. See Pr. 18:11.

A wall of brass is used by Horace, Ep. I, b. 1, v. 60, as symbol of the greatest strength and defense.

The wall of the New Jerusalem, Re. 21:12, &c., is evidently intended to express the security of the inhabitants in that happy state; and the angel at each gate, as a sentinel or guard, expressing the same thing, with the addition of the hoar arising from such guardianship.

In Pr. 25:28, the man who has no command over his own temper, is compared to a city that is broken down and without walls. He lives exposed to all the consequences of his own turbulent passions.

Cludian has 'non dabitis murum scleri,' i. e. you shall give no harbor or security to crime.

The servants of Nahal speak of David's followers as having been a wall to them both night and day; i. e. were a guard or security. 1 S. 25:16. So Ajax is called by Homer the wall or bulwark of the Grecian band. Il. 7.

That is a beautiful expression made use of by Isaiah, 26:1,

'In that day shall this song be sung,
In the land of Judah we have a strong city,
Salvation shall He establish for walls and bulwarks.'

Sometimes a wall denotes separation. Thus the ceremonial law given to the Jews is called a 'middle wall of partition.' Ep. 2:14.

Walls used to be dedicated with particular ceremonies, see Ne. 12:27, and were thence called sacred.

In idolatrous countries, they were used as a place of sacrifice. The king of Moab offered his eldest son upon the wall. See 2 K. 3:27.

Pomponius mentions the sacredness of walls in lib. II, § 10—“Sanctæ res quoque, veluti muri et portæ civitatis quodammodo juris divini sunt, et idea mulius in bonis sunt, idea autem muros sanctos deimus, quia puma capituli constituta est in eos, qui aliquid in muros deliquerunt.” Whence the law of Romulus, “Ne quis nisi per portam urbem ingreditur, mena sacra-santa sunt”—Let no one enter the city except by the gate; let the walls be sacred.

WATCHMEN. By watchmen are meant the prophets of God. See Ez. 3:17, and 33:2,9, 14, 58:1. They gave notice of God’s dispensations, and called upon men to act suitably under them. The true watchman or faithful prophet is distinguished from the temporizer and seeder.

In Jer. 6:17, God declares his intention of sending watchmen to give timely warning to his people, and at the same time exhorts them to pay due attention to the warning so given them by sound of trumpet, as the manner of watchmen was in making public proclamation of the enemy’s approach.

Lowth considers the term watchmen to be borrowed from the temple service, in which there was appointed a constant watch, day and night, by the Levites. The watches in the East, even to this day, are performed by a loud cry from time to time, to mark the hour, and to show that they themselves are attentive to their duty. Hence the watchmen are said by Isaiah, 52:8, to lift up their voice, and in 62:6, not to keep silence; and the greatest reproof to them is, that they are dumb dogs—they cannot bark—dreamers—sluggards—loving to slumber, 56:10. And he cites the 134th Psalm as an example of the temple watch, which was the alternate cry of two different divisions of watchmen. By this, light is thrown on an obscure passage in Ma. 2:12—

“Jehovah will eat of the man that doth this; The watchman and the overseer, from the tents of Jacob, And him that presenteth an offering to Jehovah, God of hosts.”

Rabbi Eliezer says, there are three watches in the night, and in each watch sits the holy and blessed God, and roars like a lion; and it is said, Jehovah roars from on high, and utters his voice from his habitation.

In the room of the prophets of the Old Testament are the ministers of the New, who are the watchmen of the Christian church, and “watch for their souls, as they that must give account.” And to whom it is said, “Take heed to the flock over which the Holy Spirit hath made you watchmen (overseers).” Hence to the angel of the church of Sardis, it is written, “Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die. If thou wilt not watch, I will come upon thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.”

WATER. Water is so necessary to life, that the oneirocritics make it, when clear, cold, and pleasant, the symbol of great good.

Thus, according to the Indian, in ch. 28, “to dream of quenching one’s thirst with pure water,” denotes a greater joy than can be procured by any worldly affluence. And in ch. 157, it is said, “If a king dreams that he makes an aqueduct for his people of pure water, and they, being thirsty, drink of it, it signifies that he will relieve, set at liberty, and make joyful the oppressed.”

On the other hand, in ch. 182, muddy waters denote diseases and afflictions. Hence the torments of wicked men, after this life, were by the ancients represented under the symbol of a lake, whose waters were full of mud and dung. Virgil, En. b. 6, v. 293; Diogen. Laert. b. 6, § 39; Plutarch de Audient.; Poet. p. 19.

May waters, on account of their noise, number, and disorder, and confusion of their waves, are the symbol of peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues.

The symbol is so explained in Re. 17:15; and Jer. 47:2, waters signify an army or multitude of men.

The comparison of the noise of a multitude to the noise of many or mighty waters, is used by Isaiah, in 17:12,13, much after the same manner as Homer compares the noise of a multitude to the noise of the waves of the sea in a storm, Iliad, b. v. 394. The passage in Isaiah is as follows:

“Woe to the multitude of the numerous peoples, Who make a sound like the sound of the sea; And the roaring of nations. Who make a rushing like the roaring of mighty waters, Like the roarings of mighty waves do the nations roar, But He shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far away, And they shall be driven like the chaff of the hills before the wind, And like the gawamer before the whirlwind.”

The parallel in Homer is far inferior in grandeur:

“The monarch spoke, and straight a mournful rose, Loud as the surge when the tempest blows; That, dashed on broken rocks, tumultuous roar, And foam and thunder on the stony shore.”

WELL. A pit sunk below the surface of the earth, signifies any obscure place, whence it is difficult to draw forth any thing.

In Eastern countries, the prisons for slaves were made like pits or dens under ground, and their graves were sometimes formed in a similar manner, as the Egyptians and Phrygians did.

Hence it comes that graves were compared to prisons, and prisons to graves. And in 1s. 24:22, the pit there mentioned is explained of a prison.

And so a prison is called putens, a pit, in Plautus, Aulul. act. 2, scene 3, “Vincite, veterante, in putens condite.”

So that a well or pit without water, singly considered, may, as the case requires, signify either the grave or a prison.

WHORE. The Hebrew term for whore signifies not only a lewd woman, but an unkeepper and trading woman, from zon, to feed or entertain strangers. And because such women were addicted to prostitution, the word came to signify a bawd or whore. Thus the harlot Rahab is in the Samaritan Chronicle a hostess; and by the same word are Jerusalem and Samaria described in the Targum on Ez. 23:44, where the prophet describes them at the same time as whores and hostesses, entertaining all the idolatrous strangers. Hardeoxion, an inn, signifies also a brothel in the verses of Philipides, cited by Plutarch. By this we may guess why it was so shameful to be seen in a victualling-house, as we find it was by some passages in ancient authors, because such places were brothels. Hence the reprobation in Jer. 5:7, they lodge in the harlots’ houses. Though Blayne makes it to signify the idol’s temple, as adultery means idolatry.

From this notion of a whore being a trader and entertainer of strangers, the city of Tyre, which was the finest man in the world at that time, is, by the prophet Isaiah, called a harlot, in 23:16; and so likewise Nineveh, in Na. 3:4. Whoring and trading are therefore synonymous, and to this purpose, see Is. 23:17.

As uncleanness of all kinds was the frequent adjunct of idolatry, amongst the Babylonians, Grecians, and others, as mentioned by Herodotus and Strabo, so it appears to have been among the Canaanites and Midianites; and hence fornication, whoredom, and adultery, came to be used to denote, in general, idolatrous worship and practices.

On these accounts, a harlot or whore is the symbol of a church, city, or nation, that is guilty of idolatry, unchristian, or irreligious practices, and that procures to herself by the gains thereof great riches and power. See Re. 17:1,2,5; and see Lowman on the passage.

WINDS. Winds, as the cause of storms, are a proper symbol of wars and great commotions. The raging of the winds and waves, and the blindness of the people, have long been considered as analogous.

They are unanimously so explained by the Oriental interpreters. And with Artemidorus, stormy winds denote great dangers and troubles.

The metaphor taken from winds, to denote wars, is common in all authors. See Horace, b. 1, Ode 11, with the commentators.

The use which the prophets make of the symbol is to the same effect, to denote insurrections of enemies and the like.

Thus, in Da. 7:22,3, the prophet has a vision of the four monarchies, which were to arise from the wars and tumults of men, expressed by the symbol of “four winds striving upon the great sea.” The vicinity of the several kingdoms to the great sea, or Mediterranean, can easily be way of distinction from the lesser seas or lakes in Judea, may serve to illustrate further, as Wintle observes, the propriety of the prophet’s analogy. From the various tumults and commotions with which the countries around this sea were agitated, the four large monarchies or empires emerged or came up; and their various ravages, idolatry, and tyranny, sufficiently justify the allusion to wild beasts.

Virgil, Aen. 1, 89, has a similar passage, only there the winds are literally meant:

“Una Europa Notaque ruunt, crebique procella Africu.”

In Jer. 49:36,37, the symbol is both used and explained:

“I will bring against Elam four winds

From the four extremities of the heavens,” &c.;

i. e. enemies directing their force against them from every quarter of the heavens.

So, in Jer. 51:1, a destroying wind is a destructive war.

Wind is sometimes applied metaphorically to doctrine. Ep. 4:14. He. 13:9. Ja. 1:5.

It is also used as the emblem of the Holy Spirit. Ac. 2:22. Jn. 3:8.

It is occasionally employed as an emblem of the uncertainty of human life and its fluctuating concerns. Thus in Jn. 6:26, 7:7. Ps. 76:39. Ec. 5:15. Jer. 5:13. Ho. 8:7, &c.

Re. 7:1, to hold the winds that they should not blow, is a very proper prophetic emblem of a state of peace and tranquillity.

WINE. The Egyptian Interpreter says, “Sharp, sour wine denotes bitterness and affliction.”

The Nazarites were particularly commanded to abstain from wine. See Ann. 2:11,12.

Wine is used as the symbol of spiritual blessings. See Is. 25:6—

“And Jehovah, God of hosts, shall make

For all people, in this mountain,

A feast of delicacies, a feast of old wines,

Of delicacies exquisitely rich, of old wines perfectly refined.”

See also Pr. 9:5. Is. 55:1.

Wine is also the symbol of the divine judgments. Ps. 60:3,

“Thou hast made us to drink the wine of astonishment.”

This may be considered as equivalent to the cup of fury or trembling. Is. 51:17. Zeph. 1:2. For it is usual to denote the dispensations of Providence, favorable or adverse, by some similar metaphor. See Ps. 36:8. Jb. 21:20. Is. 30:20. Jer. 33:16. 25:15. Mat. 20:22,23. Jn. 18:11. Re. 14:10.

See also Is. 65:8.

God reproaches the Jews by Isaiah, 1:22—

“Thy silver is become dross;

Thy wine is mixed with water;”

an image to express adulteration. See Lowth’s note on the passage. A metaphor which Paul seems to use, 2 Co. 2:17, where he says, “We are not like many who adulterate the word of God;” i. e. with human inventions or imaginations.

Wine, from its intoxicating effects, is used to denote communion in the idolatries of the mystic Babylon. Re. 14:8. Comp. Jer. 51:7.

Lies, or drags of wine, figuratively signify divine judgments. Ps. 75:8. Is. 51:17, &c.

In Jer. 48:11, it denotes permanence in one situation:

“Moab hath settled upon his lees.”

By this allegory, Moab is represented as having enjoyed singular advantages from having constantly remained in his own country ever since he became a people.

Ho. 3:1, “and love flagons of wine;” i. e. to drink wine in the temples of their idols. Am. 2:8. Jud. 9:27.

WINE-PRESS, among the Israelites, was like a threshing-floor; and therefore we read that Gideon was threshing in one of them, Jnd. 6:11. The Septuagint has it, πασδικον στρων τη ληνων.

The form it seems to have been this: suppose a bank of earth raised in a convenient circumference, or else a floor sunk below the surface of the ground about it; that the grapes and juice may be kept in; then on one side a pit was sunk much lower than the floor, to place the vats to receive the new-pressed juice falling into them. This floor was the wine-press. Hence we may easily understand why our Savior expresses the making of a wine-press by digging; as also teach in ch. 5.

The meaning of the symbol is very easy. The Indian Oneirocritic, in ch. 195, explains it of great conquest, and, by consequence, much slaughter. It is so used in Is. 63:3—

“I have trodden the wine-press alone,

And of the people there was none with me.

And I trod them in mine anger,

And I trampled them in mine indignation,

And their life-blood was sprinkled upon my garments,

And I have stained all mine apparel.”

And in La. 1:15, the destruction of Judah is represented under this type:

“Jehovah hath trodden down all my valiant ones in the midst of me;”

He hath called an assembly against me, to crush my young men;

Jehovah hath trodden the virgin, the daughter of Judah,

as in a wine-press.”

And the symbol is extremely proper. The pressure of the grapes till their blood comes out, as their juice is called in De. 32:14, aptly representing great pressure, or affliction, and effusion of blood.

Re. 14:19. The great wine-press of the wrath of God.

To tread a wine-press, as before remarked, is a prophetic description of destruction. The images in this vision are very strong and expressive. The largest wine-presses were used to be in some places out of the city. So in v. 20, “The wine-press was trodden without the city,” and seems to intimate the great numbers that shall be involved in this general destruction. This judgment seems still to be future. No past period or event appears exactly applicable to it. It must be therefore left to time more fully to explain it.

The wine-press is sometimes the symbol of abundance of good. Thus, Pr. 3:10, 'The presses shall burst out with new wine.'

WING. Wings are the symbol of defence and protection, and are taken from the action of the parent bird, when her young are in danger. Hence Jesus says of Jerusalem, Mat. 23:37, 'How often would I have gathered thee, as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings!' And the Psalmist says, Ps. 36:7, 'The sons of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings!' And Boas thus addresses Ruth, Ru. 2:12, 'Under whose wings (i. e. God's) thou art come to trust.'

That the term wing is sometimes used in an adverse sense, is true. See Jer. 48:40; and 49:22; and compare De. 28:40.

That it has many other metaphorical meanings, such as,

The thanks of an army, and the arrangement of its battalions. Is. 8:8.

The extremities of the earth, and remote regions. Jb. 37:3, 38:13; Is. 11:12, 21:16; Ez. 7:2, &c.

The extremity, hem, fringe, or tuft of a garment. Nu. 15:38; Ru. 3:9; 1 S. 24:5; Jer. 2:34; Hag. 2:12; Zeb. 8:23, &c.

The beams of the sun. Ma. 4:2. An opposite mode of speaking is found in Virgil, Een. b. 8,

* Night comes on, and covers the earth with its dusky wings.'

The wings of the wind; i. e. its swift and impetuous motion. 2 S. 22:11; Ps. 18:11; Ps. 104:3.

That it has these various meanings; in short, that it signifies any thing that projects, as the wing of a bird from its body, is plain, from numerous passages of Scripture. Still the symbolical meaning above assigned to it, as its most general figurative application, is correct. See Ps. 17:8; Ps. 91:4, &c.

Jolans, in Euripides, quoted by Lancaster, to express that the children of Hercules were under his protection after their father's death, says, 'they were under his wings.' And Megara, speaking of the same children, says, 'she preserved them under her wings, as a hen her young ones.' Hercules Furens, v. 71.

The Hebrew term for wing, cuppah, signifies a covering, and, as a covering is protection, so the wing is a proper symbol of the same, just as a tabernacle is a covering in hot countries, and is therefore a symbol of protection. So the fortress in Babylon was called trepa, wings, from the protection it pretended to afford. On account of wings being the symbol of protection, some of the Egyptians called their god, whom they looked upon as everlasting and immortal, Cupha, that is, the wing, or Cuphis, as Strabo writes it, with the Greek termination. And they also represented him with a wing upon his head, as the symbol of his royalty; the chief notion of the deity and of kings being that of protectors. And therefore the true God is, on this account, styled, in 1 Th. 4:10, 'the protector of all men, but especially of those that believe.' See Daubuz.

Another use of wings is to carry away or help in flight; and in this case also, wings are the symbols of protection. Thus, in Ex. 19:4, God says to the Israelites, after he had delivered them from Pharaoh, and caused them to pass safely into the wilderness, 'Ye have seen what I did to the Egyptians, and how I bare you on eagles' wings; and brought you to myself.' The same image is beautifully expanded in De. 32:11, 12—

'As an eagle stirreth up her nest,
Fluttereth over her young,
Spreading abroad her wings,
Taketh them, beareth them on her wings;
So Jehovah alone did lead him,
And there was no strange god with him.'

Wings, when used to fly upwards, are the symbols of exaltation. Thus, Is. 40:31, 'They shall mount up with wings as eagles,' i. e. they shall be highly exalted.

Ps. 139:9,

'Should I lift up my wings to the dawn,
Or dwell in the utmost extremity of the sea.'

By the dawn, meaning the East; by the sea, the West; in other words, Should I take my flight eastward or westward, the result would be the same. And, as Merrick observes, there is no more inappropriateness in attributing to a man wings, than horns.

The passage in Is. 18:1,

'Ho! thou land shadowed with wings!' has always been considered an obscure one. Lowth translates it,

'Ho! to the land of the winged cymbal!' and defends his interpretation in a note. But Vitringa's mode of explaining it, as quoted by

Parkhurst, seems preferable; he explains the wings here mentioned of the chains of mountains, which, it is well known, border and bound on each side the long valley of the Nile, so that Egypt is overshadowed or protected, both from the rays of the sun, and from invasion, on the west towards Lybia, and on the east towards Arabia; and which chains of mountains, in running from the south towards the north, diverge on each side to a great distance, like two wings. See Shaw, Pococke, Egmont, and Hayman's Travels.

Junius and Tre-mellius give nearly the same idea, understanding, by wings, the coasts or shores of the country, which are enclosed with high and shady mountains, such as Strabo affirms to be in the neighborhood of the Red Sea.

While Glassius interprets wings in the above passage, as meaning the 'sails of ships,' which are their extreme parts, and are spread out in the shape of wings, and are the instruments of swift motion over the waters, when blown by winds. They also afford a shade to sailors. So in Virgil, Een. 3, 520, 'Velorum pandimus alas.' We spread forth the wings of our sails. Da. 9:27, 'the desolating wing of desolation'—by which phrase is to be understood the Roman army and its legions, who were detestable on account of their idolatry. Compare Mat. 21:15, with Lu. 21:20.

There is another reason why Daniel may use the term 'wing' here, as well as why he assigns the wings of a bird or fowl to two of the four mystical beasts, which, in his vision, represented the four great monarchies. For by this picture the desolation, which these monarchies were to bring on other nations, and the speed and force with which they would act, were strongly and beautifully represented to those who understood symbolical writing.

The stretching out of wings signifying action or design, the names of these symbols were naturally used for the things signified by them. Hence Isaiah, predicting the invasion of Judea by the king of Assyria, has used that expression, 8:8,

'And the expanse of his wings shall be
Over the full breadth of thy land, O Immanuel!'

By the like metaphor, Jeremiah predicted the desolation of Moab, 48:10,

'Behold, like an eagle shall he fly,
And shall spread forth his wings over Moab.'

Maimonides, in his Mos. Nev. p. 1, c. 49, says, 'Observe that all things, which are moved by a very rapid motion, are, on account of their celerity, said to fly.' Hence Tertullian also says, 'Ononis spiritus alas,' every spirit is winged. And hence Mercury, the messenger of the gods, is said to be winged. Euripides applies the term to weapons, in Orestes, v. 274, 'The winged arrows of bows,' and Virgil, in Een. b. 5, has, 'Swifter than the winds and the wings of the thunderbolt.' And Claudian, b. 2, de Rapt. v. 218,

'Jupiter aether summo
Faecis roti torratis fulmis alas.'

Euripides, in Heenca, v. 70, applies the term to dreams:

'O venerable Earth,
Mother of dreams, having black wings.'

And to spectres, in the same play, v. 704,

'A spectre passed by me, having dark wings.'

Hence we find them ascribed to the seraphim in Is. ch. 6, whose wings, six in number, were used for a threefold purpose—to cover the face, to cover the feet, and to fly.

And God Himself is said to 'walk upon the wings of the wind.' Ps. 104:3. The theology of the Gentiles attributed wings to their deities. Thus Virgil, Een. 5, v. 657,

'Cum Dea se parbus per colum sustulit alas.'

And Homer decks his hero Achilles in a similar manner, II. 19,

'The chief beholds himself with wondering eyes;
His arms he poises, and his motion tries;
Buoyed by some inward force, he seems to swim,
And feels a vision lifting every limb.'

WITHIN AND WITHOUT. These, in Scripture style, mean the Jews and the Gentiles, the one within and the other without the Mosaic law and covenant. Thus, in De. 23:5, 'the wife of the dead shall not marry without unto a stranger.'

And thus, in relation to those who were Christians, or within the church, and those who were not so, Paul says, 1 Co. 5:12, 'Do ye judge them that are within? But them that are without, God judgeth.'

Co. 4:5, 'Walk in wisdom toward them that are without;' i. e. toward unconverted persons. And the same in 1 Th. 4:12.

And this language is used in reference to the New Jerusalem, Re. 22:15, 'For without are dogs and sorcerers, &c.'

WOMAN. Woman, in the symbolical language, is frequently the symbol of a city or body politic, of a nation or kingdom.

Thus, in Aischylus, Pers. 181, the monarchy of Persia, and the republic of Greece, are represented in a symbolical dream by two women.

They who are acquainted with medals and inscriptions, many of which are symbolical, know that cities, as even Rome, frequently were represented by women. And so, in like manner, statues in the shape of women were made to represent cities.

In the ancient prophets, the symbol is very often used for the church or nation of the Jews. Thus, in Ez. ch. 16, there is a long description of that people under the symbol of a female child, growing up by several degrees to the statue of a woman, and then married to God, by entering into covenant with Him.

And therefore when the Israelites acted contrary to that covenant, by forsaking God and following idols, then they became properly represented by the symbol of an adulteress or harlot, that offers herself to all comers. Ez. 16:32, 38, 23:45; Ho. 3:1, Is. 1:21; Jer. 2:20; Ez. 16:15, 16, 28, 35, &c. Ho. 1:2.

And adultery itself, or fornication in a married state, becomes the symbol of idolatry as in Jer. 3:8, Ez. 23:37, and 16:26, 29.

There is a very mysterious prophecy in Zeh. 5:5, &c., where a woman is represented as sitting in an ephah, and as carried through the air by two others. It is not easy to say what meaning should be attached to it. Newcome says, 'The meaning of the vision seems to be, that the Babylonian captivity had happened on account of the wickedness committed by the Jews; and that a like dispersion would befall them, if they relapsed into like crimes.' Thus the whole chapter is an awful admonition that multiplied curses, and particularly dispersion and captivity, would be the punishment of national guilt.

But Capelus's interpretation well deserves attention. He considers verse 8 as denoting that God treads on the neck of wickedness, and restrains it from expatiating; and verses 9, 10, 11, as signifying that God was propitious to the Jews, and transferred the punishment of iniquity to the Babylonians, whom the weight of the divine vengeance should ever depress. It may be added to the remark of this critic, that Babylon was soon to suffer a signal calamity from the reigning Persian monarch.

See a dissertation on this subject in the Emblema Sacra of Ewaldus, vol. iii. p. 508, &c.

For an explanation of that other vision in Re. 12:1, &c., see the Dissertation of the same author, and Lowman on the Revelation in loc., where the church is represented by the figure of a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars.

Woman is sometimes used metaphorically for weak and effeminate persons; as Is. 3:12, 19; 16; Jer. 50:37, 51:30; Na. 3:13.

WRITE signifies to publish or notify, because this is the first intention of writing; and at first no writings were made but upon pillars or other monuments, merely to notify things.

Thus, when God says, in Is. 65:6, 'Behold it is written before Me,' it immediately follows as synonymous, 'I will not keep silence.'

And in Jer. 22:30, he is said, 'Write this man childless; i. e. publish and let all men know, that this man shall be childless.'

And hence, because writing is publishing, therefore an author not read, is, with Martial, one that hath not written, —

'Venerabis in me narratur scribere Cinn,
Non scribi, cujus carmina nemo legit.'

Lid. 3, Ep. 9.

By the notification of things, the effect intended is brought about; and, in this sense, to write is to effect.

Solomon says, Pr. 7:3,

'Bind my words upon thy fingers;
Write them upon the tablet of thine heart.'

He of course meant that such precepts should be understood figuratively; and yet it was on such texts as these that the Pharisees founded their practice of binding phylacteries upon their foreheads. See Ex. 13:16; De. 6:5; 11:18. And hence, perhaps, also the popular phrase among us, of having a thing at the fingers' ends, when we are perfectly acquainted with it. Durell,
